time that ended, Geo. George S. Brown, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff—four minutes late—had scurried to his appointed place next to Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and his wife.

After a review of the all-services honor guard and more music, Mr. Ford and the Queen mounted a red-carpeted platform for the speeches. Despite the heat, the Queen looked cool in a fitted coatdress of aquamarine silk with a matching puffy beret topped with a pom-pom. Mrs. Ford wore a contrasting dress of brilliant yellow with a tilted wide-brimmed hat.

When it came time for Mr. Ford to give his speech, he turned his back to the Queen, marched to the microphones at the corner of the platform and began, "Your Majesty . . . He spoke with his back squarely to the Queen the whole time when she spoke, following him, she compromised by turning slightly toward him and looking back over her shoulder now and then.

The speeches stressed the bonds of friendship that have linked the two nations. After them, the Queen, Prince Philip and the Fords went off for a private lunch in the family dining room, although a hopeful crowd lingered on Pennsylvania Avenue across from Blair House, where the Queen and the Prince are staying.

Between her public appearances, which are almost constant, the Queen is doing some routine royal chores—this trip, handing out honors and awards as she goes.

Handing Out Honors
In Washington, for example, John Widgely, the Washington bureau chief of The Economist, is being made a Commander of the British Empire for "outstanding services to journalism"; in New York, Clive Barnes, drama critic of The New York Times, will also be given his C.B.E. Other recipients of various honors include a figure-skater, John Curry; a cashier with the British mission to the United Nations, and the director of the Frontier Nursing Service in Kentucky.

Tonight, the weather, which had been spasmodically rainy during the afternoon, cleared in god time for the Queen's arrival at the White House at 8 P.M. She was a glittering figure in a yellow organza dress embroidered with brilliant and a diamond tiara necklace and earrings.

Wearing the blue sash of the Order of the Garter, she stood on the lawn of the White House with the President and Mrs. Ford shaking hands with each of the 200 guests before dinner began.

There was a marked division of opinion as to the appropriate courtesy. All of the British and some of the Americans did something half way between standing up straight and bending the knee and a sort of bob.

DECLARATION OF DEPENDENCE

We, therefore, the Representatives of Great Britain, do solemnly Publish and Declare, That this Island is, and of Right ought to be, the fifty-first State of the United States of America and Britain.

In its current issue, the British weekly The Economist is publishing a tongue-in-cheek parody of the Declaration of Independence, this time begging for reunification with "our American Brethren" on the face of "a History of Repeated Injuries" by "the Rulers of Great Britain." Financially, Britain might be better off as another State in the Union, The Economist chides, adding defensively: "What if we did burn down Washington in 1814? Jimmy Carter, at least, ought to approve."

In the competition for jewels, the only American diamond in a category with the Queen's for brilliance were those worn by Happy Rockefeller, the wife of the Vice President.

Dinner in the tent in the oaks Garden began late and went on longer than planned, delaying the toasts and the start of the entertainment.

In the prepared text of the Queen's toast—and she over deviates from the text—the Queen said it was "a generous gesture" of the United States to have invited her during the Bicentennial week.

"After all," she continued, "nobody can say that what happened on the Fourth of July, 1776 wasn't very much a bilateral affair between us!"

She went on to speak of the close links between the two countries and the necessity for interdependence in the modern world. She added her hope that Anglo-American friendship would "long continue to flourish for the sake of both our

Her most frequent question appeared to be about where the person she was speaking to came from. One man, Powell Campbell of Chicago, told her: "You're such a credit to the world," to which she replied, "Thank you."

The Queen appears far less matronly and more attractive than in photographs; her straight back and smooth walk, even up a flight of stairs in a ball gown, testify to years of discipline and practice.

Keeping on the Move
When the Queen must stand for extended periods, which must be often if the last two days are a gauge, she moves her feet constantly, in tiny, almost imperceptible movements, as do others whose profession require them to be on their feet a lot.

Constitutional Commission Appointed in Unified Vietnam

HONG KONG, July 7 (Agence France-Presse)—Vietnam's National Assembly has appointed a commission to draft a constitution on the basis of the unification of the North and South. The official Hanoi press agency reported today that the commission held its first session yesterday under the Assembly's Chairman, Truong Chinh.

It was announced a week ago that pending a new constitution, unified Vietnam would operate on the basis of the 1960 constitution, which empowers the National Assembly, the highest state organ, to elect the President and state ministers. This the current Assembly has already done.

2 More Bodies Found After Gunfight in Brazil

RIO DE JANEIRO, July 7 (AP)—The bodies of two more possible victims of an Amazon jungle gunfight were discovered today.

The bodies, believed those of farmers who attacked John Weaver Davis, an Alabama-born rancher, and his sons, were found about 10 miles from the site of the battle, the Jornal do Brasil news service reported.

Mr. Davis was seriously wounded in the shooting, which occurred Saturday on a deserted country road. His sons, John Mallory Davis, 33 years old, and Bruce Davis, 29, were shot dead.

Mr. Davis, who emigrated to Brazil several years ago, owned a farm in the Amazon in the state of Para at the edge of the Amazon jungle. He and his sons were ambushed by a group of farmers.

Cabinet Formed in Four Days of Talks

By HENRY GINIGER
Special to The New York Times

Madrid, July 7—Spain had a cabinet, Mr. Martin-Villa is 41 years old and was a public servant under Franco but with more liberal attitudes than most. He was preparing to transform the Syndicalist organization into independent labor and management groups when Mr. Arias was dismissed.

The Finance Ministry is headed by Eduardo Carriles Galarraga, a 52-year-old lawyer and businessman. He is director general of the Fomento Insurance Company, one of the country's largest, and is associated with a chain of conservative Catholic newspapers. He takes over economic policy at a time of lack of growth, high inflation and persistent unemployment.

The desire to carry out as smooth a transition as possible had led Mr. Suarez to extend a hand to some groups in the opposition, including moderate ones in Catalonia and the Basque region.

Police Disperse Protesters
BARCELONA, Spain, July 7 (Reuters)—Riot policemen firing tear gas and rubber bullets dispersed a demonstration by several hundred workers here tonight.

The workers came from the Motor Iberica tractor factory, which had been shut down by a strike over wage demands.

They had unsuccessfully asked the Government for permission to demonstrate for the reinstatement of 1,800 dismissed colleagues.

In Paris, Frenchmen and foreign tourists sun themselves near the Eiffel Tower as heat wave goes on unabated.

Breton Farmers Calculate Toll as Drought Perists

By JAMES F. CLARITY
Special to The New York Times

LANRODEC, France, July 4—At the sound of a distant thunderclap or the sight of a lightning flash, the people in this parched region of Brittany look to the sky, hoping that the rains will come to end the worst drought France has suffered in more than a century.

In much of France, and elsewhere in Europe, the drought has created water shortages, burned forest-land and crops, endangered livestock and forced millions of people to spend several hours a day getting water for drinking and washing.

In France, President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing has declared the month-old drought and heat a "national calamity." The Socialist leader, Francois Mitterrand, an indefatigable political rainmaker, has charged the Government with failure to prevent the drought-related problems. The Communist Party complained that the Giscardist majority in Parliament refused to debate the issue.

Here, in the eoverating heat of the farms near the towns of Lanrodec and Plelo and in the city of St-Brieuc, there is no panic, but there is growing worry and the people of the towns and countryside seem to have adopted a calm attitude: wan but sane, and pray for rain.

In this part of Brittany—suffering more severely than most areas of France—people say there hasn't been enough rain in the past six months to cool a cow's tongue or wash the flies off a pig's back. Pierre Bahier, a bearded dairy and corn farmer in his mid-30's, says he has already lost thousands buying extra water for his cows, whose milk production is slipping. Pointing to the last of his green pastures, he said: "I have to ration the cows every day. And tomorrow, I begin feeding them hay that is supposed to be saved until January. If it doesn't rain in two or three weeks, I will lose millions and wind up in debt besides."

Mr. Bahier said that if the drought continued through July, he and other dairy farmers would be forced to sell their cows for beef at relatively low prices. He patted one cow on the rump and said, "She is young and she could have been a great producer, but now . . ."

On his farm in Plelo, Pierre Le Goux said his pigs were costing him more because they were drinking more water, which he must buy from town because the local authorities have forbidden the diversion of river and stream waters.

On the Rue Mansart, people line up daily to take water drawn up from an underground stream. "But it's no good for drinking," said an old man. "I have lived here most of my life and there has never been any thing like this. Not even during the war."

"Even mineral water is rationed now," said a middle-aged woman. "Two bottles to a customer for three if you know the store owner. But to wash oneself I use mineral water, that's expensive."

"They should have shut the water off two or three weeks ago," said a teacher, "to arrange for pressure pumps to move water from the now-shallow Gouët and Gouédic Rivers. Army tank trucks have been stationed in several parts of the city to distribute water, especially near high-rise public housing."

Portuguese Communists Reject Calls for a Revolutionary Front

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times

LISBON, July 7—The Portuguese Communist Party rejected appeals to join a revolutionary front and declared that it would support the newly elected president in his defense of the Constitution.

In its first major pronouncement since last month's presidential election, the Communist Party's Central Committee acknowledged its "relative defeat" in the election.

Nevertheless, it insisted that only a left-wing government with Communist participation could solve Portugal's grave political, economic and social problems.

The Portuguese Supreme Court yesterday confirmed General Antonio Ramalho Eanes as the new President after final results gave him 60.79 percent of the vote in the June 27 election.

Takes Office in Week
General Ramalho Eanes, 41-year-old army chief of staff and a firm disciplinarian, is to be sworn in as President next Wednesday. He has said that he will name as Prime Minister the Socialist Party leader, Mario Soares, whose party won April's election for the National Assembly.

Mr. Soares declared in a recent interview that he would make no alliances with either the Communists or parties to the right. He intends to form a minority government with Socialists and independents and hopes to win parliamentary support or at least abstention on his program from other political groups.

The Communist Party today firmly declared that it would not back a solely Socialist government. Such a government, it said, would carry out right-wing policy and "inevitably would provoke the opposition and resistance of the masses."

Socialist Party sources today termed the Communist statement "a blackmail attempt" and insisted that the Socialists would hold firm and not bring Communists into the government.

Much of the Communist Party's 29-page document was an analysis of the results of the presidential election.

The Communists admitted

Indian Ambassador in China For the First Time Since '62

PEKING, July 7 (Agence France-Press)—For the first time in almost 15 years an Indian Ambassador has arrived in Peking to take up his post.

The arrival today of K. R. Narayanan follows the decision of China and India last April to normalize relations, beginning with the re-establishment of diplomatic ties.

Diplomatic relations were reduced to the level of chargé d'affaires at India's initiative shortly after the beginning of border war between the two countries in 1962.

that the party had lost many votes to the extreme leftist candidate, Maj. Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho, and accused him of "dividing the workers and the armed forces." The major has called for a revolutionary front of leftist forces.

According to the election results released today, Major Saraiva de Carvalho, who was supported by radical neo-Communist leftists, came in second with 16.24 percent of the vote.

The present Prime Minister, Adm. José Pinheiro de Azevedo, who suffered a heart attack during the campaign, came in third with 14.18 percent. The Communist Party candidate, Octavio Pato, was fourth and last with 7.49 percent of the total 4,881,125 votes cast.

Since the election, Major Saraiva de Carvalho has urged the Communist Party to abandon its "reformist ways" and put its "powerful party machine" behind a revolutionary opposition front.

Today the Communist Party gave a firm no to the major and his populist organization, warning against "extreme leftist activities and coup threats."

"The Central Committee warns against caudillos and the theory of supermen and saviors," the document said, adding that Major Saraiva de Carvalho's "mass front" was in reality an "instrument of diversion and adventurism."

U.S. Urged by Moynihan to Join Big Nations to Fight Terrorism

By THOMAS P. RONAN

Daniel P. Moynihan urged the United States yesterday to join with other industrial nations in combating international terrorism. Asking immediate action, Mr. Moynihan, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for United States Senator from New York, said the recent hijacking of an Air France jet and the events surrounding it marked "the onset of new and ominous developments" in terrorism.

The plane was hijacked to Entebbe Airport in Uganda, where many of the hostages were released and the rest, mostly Israelis, were rescued by Israeli commandos. Three hostages were killed in the raid.

Mr. Moynihan, a former United States representative at the United Nations, suggested as a possible response to terrorism a boycott by this country, the nine nations of the European Economic Community and Japan of the airports of any nation that collaborated with terrorists.

The boycotters, he said at a news conference at the Biltmore Hotel, could also refuse to let planes from the collaborating nation use their airports.

Mr. Moynihan returned Tuesday night from Israel, where he delivered the commencement address at the Hebrew University and received an honorary degree from the university and conferred with high-ranking Israeli officials.

Among the developments he cited was "an increasing collaboration between terrorist groups, in this instance between Palestinian and West German elements." He said the "rudiments of an international terrorist alliance are in the making."

"The second development is that of active collusion with the terrorists of a sovereign government, in this instance the Government of Uganda," he continued. "This seems unmistakably clear, although we may yet learn otherwise."

He also mentioned as examples of government involvement the rescue by Israel "with the active cooperation of the Government of Kenya." But he said that the rescue was morally and legally justified and that Kenya showed moral courage in what she did.

President Idi Amin of Uganda has said he was motivated by humanitarian considerations in his involvement in the episode, and Kenyan officials have denied any role in the raid.

EX-NIXON AID NAMED AS FORD STRATEGIST

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 7—William E. Timmons, who twice directed strategy at Republican National Conventions for Richard M. Nixon, was named today to be the director of efforts in behalf of Mr. Nixon's convention operations for President Ford.

Rogers C. B. Morton, the Ford campaign chairman, said in announcing the appointment that Mr. Timmons's "experience and judgment will give us invaluable assistance" in the contest with Ronald Reagan for the Presidential nomination.

The closeness and severity of the rivalry were reflected in the choice of Mr. Timmons for such a prominent role in the final phase of the nominating contest. President Ford has sought to mute his ties to his predecessor and even said last April that he no longer used Mr. Nixon's name in public because the nation was better off not being reminded of Water-gate.

In an interview, Mr. Timmons said he "assumed" the Ford organization had considered and dismissed, as he had, any likelihood that his previous day to be the director of efforts in behalf of Mr. Nixon would be held against him.

He predicted that Mr. Ford would win the nomination and that previously uncommitted convention delegates would begin announcing pledges of support for him later this week.

Million Political Refugees Are Becoming a Major Problem Throughout Africa

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN
Special to The New York Times

NAIROBI, Kenya, July 7—Zewede Mahere spends much of his time here at the Blue Cat Cafe, nursing Cokes slowly so the waiters won't chase him. When he hears the 28-year-old former Ethiopian university student engages American tourists in conversation. If he is lucky, the tourists buy him a meal.

Mr. Zewede is one of 600 young Ethiopians who have walked hundreds of miles to Kenya, fleeing what they say is the repressive campaign waged against students by the Ethiopian military Government. He is also one of the more than 2 million Africans who have been displaced by political upheavals in their homelands. According to the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, one out of 300 Africans is a refugee.

Almost every African country has people like Mr. Zewede. In Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, there are cafes like the Blue Cat where men who fled South Africa, Rhodesia and Mozambique worry about surviving and dream of going home someday. In Zambia there are Angolans. In Khartoum, the Sudan, the Eritreans, more militant than most refugees, discuss the latest rumors about the secessionist war against Ethiopia. In Senegal there are 500,000 people who have fled Guinea. In Zaïre there are at least 400,000 Angolans, refugees from the colonial and civil war.

A Hard Life

With the meager resources available in these very poor countries, the life of the refugees is hard. They are forced to compete with local people for scarce land, food and jobs. Often the victims of tribal hatred that originally forced them to flee, they are frequently regarded with suspicion by the clannish people among whom they seek to resettle.

As a consequence, the movement of refugees has become a major problem for many African governments.

Tribal Warfare

Driven from their homes by political instability, the refugees often create new tensions and difficulties for most governments, which in some cases are now trying to curb migration.

For example here in Kenya, a group of several hundred refugees, mostly Ethiopian students, recently sat in for several days at refugee relief centers, protesting that they could not get jobs and that the $12 a month they received from the United Nations and private groups was not enough.

Frequently the humanitarian policies of governments collide with foreign policy considerations.

For instance, Kenya regards Ethiopia as a necessary ally against Somalia, which is viewed as having expansionist designs against both countries. Providing refuge to Ethiopian students, some of whom, notably the Eritreans, continue political activity here, is at the very least awkward. Some of Mr. Zewede's friends say they fear the Government here may be under Ethiopian pressure to force their return.

Canon Burgess Carr, the head of the All-African Council of Churches and a very political churchman, has, with limited resources, developed refugee relief programs and has sought to seize African heads of state to both the problems of the refugees and the problems that spawn them, tribalism and political violence.

Punishing the Group

"Unless African leaders encourage humanitarian reforms and human rights," said the Liberian-born minister, "our continent may well be transformed into a race of refugees."

"There is a strong and pervasive African tradition of punishing the group for the acts of an individual," explained Ali Mazrui, one of the continent's foremost political scientists, who now teaches at the University of Michigan. During a visit home to Kenya he explained that it is largely this tendency that accounts for refugee migrations.

For example, he observed, when Idi Amin overthrew the Ugandan Government of Milton Obote, Dr. Obote's fellow Longo tribesmen were hounded into exile, following the deposed president to Tanzania. Refugee movements often strain relations between African States, Mr. Mazrui explained, noting that a good part of the current hostility between Uganda and Tanzania was traceable to Mr. Obote's living next door to Tanzania's President, Julius Nyerere, who is a close friend.

Perhaps the largest recent shift of population occurred in the neighboring countries of Rwanda and Burundi, where governments, which in some cases are now trying to curb migration. In Burundi the Hutu tribesmen slaughtered over a thousand Tutsi fled to Tanzania.

Meanwhile, in Rwanda, it was the Hutu who won, and hundreds of thousands of Tutsi get jobs and that the $12 a month they received from the United Nations and private groups was not enough.

"These people," said Canon Carr, "undergo hardship, but the most tragic are the urban refugees, the ones you see here in Nairobi at the cafes or walking the streets to kill time." These men, and a few women, he said, had been upwardly mobile in their own countries, often highly skilled and educated. Suddenly they find themselves with neither status nor prospects.

Participated in Revolution

Mr. Zewede is one of these people. The son of a peasant, he was singled out by his teachers and with the aid of state scholarships was sent to the prestigious Hailu Selassie University, where he became a leader of a student group.

When, during his third year, the Emperor was overthrown, he said, he was swept up in the revolution. "I hoped we could replace the old feudal order with a real democracy," he said, explaining that he willingly went on the campaign that Without him we would have fallen into despair." But Mr. Zewede, despite his cheerful front, does sometimes despair. He knows there is really no future for him here because he cannot continue his studies. But he does not believe that conditions in Ethiopia will allow him to return in the near future. His greatest hope is to go to the United States, where he has a brother in Albuquerque, N.M. PARIS PAPERS REACH MODERNIZING ACCORD

PARIS, July 7 (Reuters)—Paris newspaper owners and printers' unions today settled their dispute over technical modernization that has kept the industry here in turmoil for more than a year.

An agreement was reached between 16 major Paris newspapers, the Communist-led Syndicat du Livre printers' union and four Paris printing plants. It will enable newspapers to replace antiquated, inefficient printing systems with modern photo-composition and computer typesetting methods. The printers' union said the changes would be carried out three years without job losses.

The popular newspaper Parisien Libere, which became the symbol of the bitter clash between management and unions over the issue, was the first to sign the agreement.

PARIS PAPERS REACH MODERNIZING ACCORD

PALESTINIANS REPEL LEFTISTS

Troops Fall Back in North

Lebanon, July 7 — Palestinian and leftist forces yielded in heavy fighting in Lebanon.

A Palestinian spokesman charged that Syrian units, part of the 15,000-member force that took over large areas of Lebanon last month in an avowed attempt to end the civil war, were helping the Christians by bombarding the leftist-held city of Tripoli.

Beirut, meanwhile, shook to continued exchanges of artillery fire. The battle for Tell and their allies still held the Christian town of Chekka, whose fall they had reported two days ago, and also the nearby town of Amyun.

The Christian Phalangist Party radio disputed this, saying rightist militiamen were in full control of Chekka and had raised their flag in Amyun, about four miles away.

fense perimeter reportedly shrank again. Yasir Arafat, the Palestinian leader in a further defiant gesture against his former allies in Damascus, announced that the headquarters of the general staff of the Palestine Liberation Army war is being moved from Damascus to Beirut.

The move follows Palestinian charges that members of the force had been imprisoned by Syria.

Beirut now is without electricity and running water and has not known a day of real peace since early March. A huge column of smoke rose from the city center.

About 50 foreigners left Beirut today for Damascus in an overland convoy, organized by the British Embassy and escorted by armed Palestinians.

Earlier the embassy warned that today's convoy would probably be the last.

International Red Cross representatives today managed to exchange the bodies of nine leftist fighters for one live rightist prisoner.

A Red Cross car and truck first brought the rightist prisoner, a Middle East Airlines employee accused by the left of spying, into east Beirut. A few minutes later the truck returned to west Beirut with the bodies.

Indonesia Reports 6,000 Papuans Lost After Earthquake

JAKARTA, Indonesia, July 7 (AP) — Earthquake-triggered landslides in the Indonesian part of New Guinea buried nearly 6,000 persons, the authorities reported today. Reports reaching Jakarta did not say whether rescue teams had managed to free some of the victims.

The Antara press agency quoted Gov. Surtan of West Irian, as the Indonesians call western New Guinea, as having said that some villages in the Baliem valley on the south slope of the central mountain range had been smothered under 90 feet of mud and rocks.

Governor Surtan reported that 420 persons were killed by the June 26 quake and that landslides ripping down into the jungled valleys had buried at least 5,800 Papuans. The agency said the governor had given the figures in an appeal to businessmen in the West Irian capital of Jayapura for relief aid. It said the business officials had donated $50,000.

Two airstrips were badly damaged by the quake and helicopters are the only means of getting relief supplies into the zone, Antara said.

The quake, which registered 7.2 on the Richter scale, had been recorded by seismologists throughout the world, but the magnitude of damage and deaths began filtering out only this week. On the open-ended Richter scale a quake registering 7 is a major one capable of widespread destruction. Aftershocks were reported as late as Sunday and thousands of Papuans fled into the jungle, the director general of the Interior Department, Col. Suwondo, reported in Jakarta. He said some 1,500 persons were seeking evacuation from the Okbrak and Kurima districts.

Colonel Suwondo said the greatest destruction was centered in 60 square miles in the Baliem valley.

In the Baliem district, which had a population of 6,000, 108 persons were killed in the quake and 3,892 were buried by slides, he said.

Governor Surtan was to fly to Jakarta tomorrow to report in person to President Suharto. The President has ordered the air force and departments of social welfare and the interior to organize relief teams.

permit as much as 10,000 microwatts per square centimeter. The Soviet Union's stricter industrial standards permit only 10 microwatts.

Mr. Funseth, while providing technical details, refused to comment on why the Soviet Union was beaming the rays, a practice that officials have said began about 16 years ago.

Soviet officials have justified the beams as necessary to curtail American electronic listening devices on the roof of upper floors of the embassy building, situated on Tchaikovsky Street in downtown Moscow.

American officials have privately conceded that these devices exist to monitor Soviet radio and telephone transmissions. They have also said that the monitoring effort was being impaired by the jamming waves. What has irritated American officials was that the Soviet Embassy on 16th Street in downtown Washington also carries out similar interceptions of radio and phone conversations but has not been subject to the countermeasures because of concern for Americans working in the area.

The beaming of radiation against the embassy in Moscow was known only to a few American officials until last February when Ambassador Walter J. Stoessel Jr. briefed his staff on the situation. News of the briefing was leaked to the press.

The briefing was held because State Department medical officers feared that the radiation might pose a health hazard over the long run, either to the eyes or to the genetic or nervous system.

Officials have stressed that there was as yet no evidence that the microwaves had been responsible for any illnesses, past or present.

Microwaves are unlike X-rays and are not ionized. X-rays in excessive amounts can cause cancer, but no connection has been made between microwaves and cancer.

The decision to release information on the embassy situation came after news reports that two young children of embassy employees had been sent to the United States for examination of unusual blood samples; one has since returned to Moscow.

Mr. Funseth said the discussions with the Russians were aimed at ending the microwave signals.

"Frankly, we regret that the Soviets have failed to turn off the transmissions completely, and thereby, in our judgment, demonstrating a lack of concern for the living and working conditions of our people in Moscow," he said.

beams caused a psychological problem. He also said no concessions were made to the Russians in return for their reduction in beams. The microwaves are said to come from across the street from the embassy. There are said to be two such beams aimed at the embassy.

Mr. Funseth said the discussion with Johns Hopkins University to conduct a survey to see whether there has ever been any correlation between the microwaves and the health of past and present embassy employees.

Body Found in Club Pool (AP) — The body of a missing youth, Timothy Jackson, 18 years old, of Mullica Hill, was found on the bottom of a swimming pool at the Raccoon Valley Swim Club here yesterday.

The Harrison Township police said. Police Chief Clarence Wingate said an autopsy would be performed.

40-Day Extension Granted In Rizzo Recall Dispute

PHILADELPHIA, July 7 (AP) — A Philadelphia Common Pleas Court judge, David Savitt, granted a 40-day extension today for the counting and validation of signatures on the petitions to recall Mayor Frank L. Rizzo.

Judge Savitt ruled that no bad faith had been shown by either the city commissioners or by the citizens group seeking the recall.

In addition, Judge Savitt ruled that the 15-day period set forth in the Philadelphia Home Rule Charter for the validation of signatures in such a recall petition was not mandatory.

Judge Savitt made no decision, however, on the question of whether the recall effort is constitutional. That decision is expected later.

Liberals Choose Steel Succeed Thorpe as Leader

By ROBERT R. SEMPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times
July 7 — Britishers entrusted their political influence to a 38-year-old Parliament who the job on the influence would be achieved.
The Liberals, however, devised a system under which local party organizations were allotted votes on the basis of their performances in recent elections and other criteria. The local groups then held mass membership meetings. Nearly 20,000 votes were counted today, reflecting the wishes of a much larger constituency of five million Liberals.
Both men had campaigned hard at local meetings and rallies, but their efforts included mudslinging, much to the delight of the British press. Mr. Steel referred to Mr. Pardoe, a large, blustery man, as a "kamikaze pilot." Mr. Pardoe retaliated by calling his opponent a "traffic cop."
They had few differences on the issues. Mr. Pardoe, once a radical member of the Labor Party, has moved away from socialist economic solutions. This placed him closer to Mr. Steel and the party as a whole, which tends to believe in individualism and decentralization but which advertises a vigorous social conscience. It thus seeks to put itself between Labor and the Conservatives.
Playing on the disenchantment of voters with both big parties, the Liberals won 6.1 million votes in the February 1974 election. This was more than half Labor's total of 11.6 million, but because the Liberals finished second in so many races, they ended up with only a few seats in Commons.

U.S. Discourages Saudis From Buying New Jets

By JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 7—The Defense Department is discouraging Saudi Arabia from purchasing advanced fighter planes such as the F-14 or F-15 on the ground that they are too sophisticated for the Saudi Air Force to handle.

The Pentagon's advice has apparently been accepted by the Saudi Government, at least for the time being. The original expectation was that Saudi Arabia would place an order for 40 to 60 of one plane or the other this summer, but now the manufacturers, who had been pressing the sale, have been told that a decision has been put off until next year.

In recent months, Saudi Arabia, which with Pentagon assistance is modernizing its armed forces, had expressed interest in buying the Air Force's F-15 Eagle, a supersonic air superiority fighter built by McDonnell Douglas, or the F-14 Tomcat, another high-performance plane built by Grumman. Saudi pilots flew both planes earlier this year in demonstration flights arranged by the manufacturers with Pentagon approval.

The planes, designed to gain superiority over the latest Soviet craft, are the most advanced fighters in the Pentagon's inventory. They are also among the most expensive, with the F-15 costing $17 million and the F-14 $21 million.

The Deputy Secretary of Defense William P. Clements Jr. said in an interview that the Pentagon was advising Saudi Arabia that its air force was not ready to maintain and fly such craft.

The Pentagon's advice, according to Mr. Clements, is that the Saudis should build their capability and experience around the less complex F-5 fighters purchased from the United States.

In the past three years the Saudis have ordered 110 F-5's, a lightweight, somewhat less expensive supersonic jet that was developed by Northrop with Defense Department assistance for sale to less advanced nations. Only about half the planes have been delivered to Saudi Arabia which is going through Northrop training of pilots and ground crews.

Mr. Clements cited the advice to the Saudis as an example of how the Defense Department, rather than being solely a promoter of foreign military sales, as charged by its critics, frequently attempted to impose restraint on foreign customers for American arms. The Saudi interest in the advanced fighters provides an illustration of how sales to one country in a region build another country's desire to obtain the same arms, if only as a matter of prestige.

The department has agreed to sell 50 F-15's to Israel and is delivering 80 F-14's to Iran. Privately American officials acknowledge that the arms buildup in Saudi Arabia is motivated in part by a desire to match the growing military power of Iran, across the Persian Gulf.

Saudi Arabia is displacing Iran as the major military customer of the Defense Department, with orders expected to total $4 billion this year.

Cambridge Council Bids Harvard Delay Its Gene Research

Special to The New York Times

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., July 7—The Cambridge City Council voted tonight to establish a three-month "good faith" moratorium and study period for an experimental type of genetic research proposed by Harvard University, which is situated in this city.

It is believed to be the first time elected officials have attempted to regulate scientific work conducted by university laboratories.

The City Council, which itself has no power to police Harvard's scientific activities, could influence the city Health Commissioner to shut down laboratories performing research considered hazardous to the local populace.

Tonight's decision came after several weeks of public debate over Harvard's intent to use a new technique to study a genetic material, deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA). The technique, called recombinant DNA, involves isolating a tiny portion of animal or plant DNA, and then inserting it for analysis into a common laboratory bacterium. The fusion of the two yields a previously unstudied type of organism.

The technique has been a controversial topic within the scientific community since its discovery three years ago. The National Institutes of Health announced its guidelines for recombinant DNA research only two weeks ago.

The recombinant research requires a "B" safety precaution, the second-highest level within laboratories regulated by the institute.

According to Prof. Matthew Meselson, chairman of the Harvard biochemistry and molecular biology department, who testified before the Council, Harvard would not only abide by the N.I.H. guidelines, but would also adhere to even stricter regulatory processes established by the university.

A number of Nobel-laureate scientists, including Dr. Walter Gilbert, also testified before the City Council. The City Council also voted to review board scientists and investigate possible health hazards. More Mail: WASHINGTON—The Postal Service today that its delivery mail and several other money order services would be affected by the new regulatory processes established by the university.

Rare Visitor to Tibet Finds a New, Secularized Lhasa With Much of Its Old Imp...

such a valley, and the air pillow in the waiting car, bulging hard and with a rubber extension for the nostril, is a reminder that the surrounding hills are not that at all but lofty mountains. It is an oxygen sack, and at 12,000 feet the traveler is likely soon to find it a help in spite of the rigorous medical tests passed back in Peking.

Until that first sight of the Potala, the traveler might be elsewhere in Central Asia. The land is rocky and poor, the flat-topped dwellings of adobe, isolated homesteads or little villages, are not very different from those around the Khyber Pass in northwest Pakistan.

But the wayfarers could only be Tibetan, the man in knee-length gowns caught up in a commodious fold at the waist, wearing often still the felt hats the Westerners must have introduced into Tibet from across the Himalayas; the women in long black skirts and brightly striped aprons.

Many carry back loads still, reminders of the recent past when the wheel was unknown in Tibet except as an adjunct to mechanical prayer. But now as well as trucks and cars and the occasional tractor in the fields, the peasants' carts invariably have axles with bearings and pneumatic tires, a first step in development in rural Asia.

Old Mantra Is Gone

That this is a new Tibet also shows in what is not to be seen. None now twist the prayer wheel or tell their beads. The mantra that was once ubiquitous in Tibet, "Om mani padme hum" ("Hail to the Jewel in the Lotus"), painted on walls or rocks in the spectrum of colors Buddhists held holy, must have been erased by time or deliberate effort. Now the maxims are painted strong on the walls in unvarying red, the ideographs of Chinese and the running script of Tibetan. "The agriculture learn from Tachai!" "Take class struggle as the key link-

Tibet at a Glance

VITAL STATISTICS—Tibet, the so-called "forbidden land" beyond the Himalayas, has long been a mystery to most of the outside world, invaded by Chinese Communist troops in 1950, it is now an autonomous region of China, equivalent to a province. It has an area of 470,000 square miles with a population of 1.3 million people. The capital is Lhasa, whose population is about 175,000. The religion is Lamaism, a late form of Buddhism modified by animism and primitive magic. Three years ago there were said to be 2,000 primary schools and 10 middle schools with a total of 124,000 pupils.

GEOGRAPHY—Tibet is the highest country in the world, averaging 16,000 feet in elevation and having many peaks ranging up to more than 25,000 feet. The towering peaks of the Himalayas in the south and the Kunlun in the north enclose high plateaus and deep valleys. Snow-fed mountain streams grow into the great rivers of India and Pakistan, the Indus and the Brahmaputra.

ECONOMY—Exports consist of wool, live animals, salt, hides, borax, tea and musk. But the yak is the core of the Tibetan economy. Its meat is the main staple of the diet, its milk is made into butter, which is the fuel for Tibetan lamps. Yak hair is woven into cloth, and shoes the North enclose high plateaus and deep valleys. Snow into utensils and yak dung, dried into stabs, is the fuel for cooking.

GOVERNMENT—After a long period of autonomy under nominal Chinese suzerainty, a new era began for Tibet with the Communist victory in China in 1949. In October 1950, a Chinese army marched into Tibet. A treaty forced on the Tibetans by the Communists in 1951 pledged Tibet autonomy with no change in the political position of the Dalai Lama, the traditional ruler. Land reform soon undermined the powers of a nationwide peasant rebellion broke out followed by the Dalai Lama fled to India. The Panchen Lama, another traditional ruler, was ousted in 1964.

Last September, marking the 10th anniversary of the establishment of the Tibetan Autonomous Region of China, Peking affirmed that Tibet was an inalienable part of Chinese territory and that the system of worshipping the Dalai Lama as a god-king "is now gone forever."

—everything else hinges on it. The ideological pulse from Peking beats as strong here as elsewhere in China.

Lhasa was once really nothing but the Potala, the tower itself a huddle of squalid hutments that, as a correspondent who came here 70-odd years ago, wrote in "Tibet," "would compare but badly with the capital of even a third-rate petty chief in India."

no more than a relic, the hollowed hub of a power, lay and spiritual, that is not only defunct but seems derided and impugned.

Modern Lhasa is like other towns of frontier China, wide streets with low, new buildings, avenues with shade trees about 15 years old, with enough traffic to require policemen at the crossroads but with so many horse carts and hand carts that the policemen seem irrelevant.

Sensible Goods in Stores

There are industries in the new Lhasa, and the department stores are stocked with the same variety of sensible and enjoyable goods as seem to be found in every corner of China. But for the Westerner, programmed from childhood with the sense of a Shangri-La beyond the Himalayas, it is the old Tibet that beckons first.

For the Buddhist, it was not the Potala that made Lhasa famous. That was, so to speak, a cross between the White House, the Pentagon, and St. Patrick's Cathedral. The Potala was a magnificent castle, redolent of power and fear but empty within but for the fact that the Dalai Lama, the god-king, lived there when the season was not too inclement.

For the Buddhist the essential focus of pilgrimage, the holy of holies, lay in the Jokhang, a temple dating from the seventh century.

The Jokhang is only a mile or so from the Lhasa guest house, an easy walk for the visitor buoyed up from a session on the oxygen cylinder that stands by every bed. The approach to the temple seems to have cleared. Earlier travelers complained that the Jokhang could not be seen openly. But now its painted pillars and gleaming gilded cupolas are splendidly apparent from the road.

The foreign visitor does not walk alone for long but collects first a convoy of children and then a crowd of all sorts of Tibetans, Chinese, young and

Tibet Visit Followed Long Effort to Get In

Neville Maxwell has been seeking admission to Tibet since he began visiting China in 1971.

In the early 1960's, when he was South Asia correspondent of The Times of London, he made repeated visits to the neighboring Himalayan state of Bhutan, which, culturally, is close kindred to pre-Communist Tibet.

Mr. Maxwell left full-time journalism in 1967, when he went to London University as a senior fellow to write the study of the Chinese-India boundary dispute published as "India's China War." Now with Oxford University, he is a visiting fellow at the Australian National University.

old. All are as open in their friendliness as in their curiosity. Some older Tibetans, their lined faces often daubed with coloring protective against sun and wind as was the custom here, for greeting put out their tongues and suck in their breath, as under the old order those of the serf class had to do before their betters to show respect and avoid fouling the air breathed by their lords and monkish rulers.

Mostly a Museum

The Jokhang now is little more than a museum, though one of unique splendor. Across its portals, where once pilgrims, progressing sometimes in endless prostrations like human caterpillars, made their devout way, stands now a railing fence. Its gate locked except for festival days. As recently as the early 1960's this was always crowded with pilgrims, making their offerings to the custodian monks and filing on through shadowed chapels to the inner sanctum and the glimpse of the Buddha that was their goal.

Now it stands bright and empty, free of all reverence and awe. In the monasteries there are said to be still numerous monks, but there are none in the Jokhang and I have seen none in the streets.

But if there are no monks to be seen around the Jokhang, something else is also missing—the horde of beggars that always mustered there, mutilated, ill, old or hale, raising, as an earlier traveler noted, "piteous wailing, sticking out their tongues and stabbing the air with their upturned thumbs."

It is said here now by Communist officials that nearly a decade we must do what took others tens of years.

Sudanese Drive to Round Up Supporters of Attempted Coup

By ERIC PACE
Special to The New York Times

CAIRO, July 7—The Sudanese Government, joined by last week's coup attempt, has been carrying out a sweeping police action against suspected plotters and dissidents, according to reports reaching Cairo.

The Sudanese Government press agency, Egyptian journalists here and others in touch with Khartoum, the Sudanese capital, reported dozens of arrests, interrogations of suspects in the capital area and the discovery of arms caches.

Fifty-four Sudanese figures reportedly were arrested. Among them, according to tomorrow's issue of the semi-official newspaper Al Ahrar, was All Mahmoud Hassan, a lawyer and member of the ultra-conservative Moslem Brotherhood, who had been slated to become Prime Minister had the plotters overthrown President Nimeiry.

Meanwhile, newspapers and broadcasts both in the Sudan and here in Egypt continued their denunciations of Libya, accusing it of having planned the coup attempt of last Friday and of having infiltrated non-Arab mercenaries to carry it out. According to the Sudanese Government radio, the uprising was crushed in fighting that left 300 people dead and 300 wounded.

Libya Denies a Role

Yesterday, the Sudanese President, Gaafar al-Nimeiry, broke diplomatic relations with Libya.

A denial of any involvement in the plot was made by a Libyan official at an organization of African Unity meeting in Mauritius this week. The Libyan charged that President Nimeiry had engaged in "collusion with the United States both in Lebanon and against the Palestinian people."

President Nimeiry has claimed that Libya's intention

Polish Party Paper Calls Farm System Backward

WARSAW, July 7 (Reuters)

Poles have been warned that their largely private small-plot farming structure has fallen as much as 15 years behind other Communist countries and 20 years behind those of Western nations.

Calling for a greater effort, the Communist Party daily Trybuna Ludu wrote: "In one decade we must do what took others tens of years."

The article followed last month's worker strikes and protests that forced the Government to withdraw proposed food price increases.

Trybuna Ludu said that only 40 percent of Polish farms were mechanized and that the country was 15 years behind Czechoslovakia and East Germany, 10 years behind Romania and Bulgaria and 20 years behind such Western countries as France and Italy.

Poland is the only Communist country in Eastern Europe without dominant farm collectivization.

Ammons Heard in Private Pension Fund Investigation

By NICHOLAS M. HORROCK

Special to The New York Times

ON July 7 — Several senators and representatives have written to the Internal Revenue Service or publicly questioned its actions in why action had not been taken in an investigation under the 1974 Employee Retirement Income Security Act, which was passed to reform the handling of some pension and retirement funds. Sources close to the I.R.S. investigation said that the law did not cover abuses dating back a decade.

When the I.R.S. revoked the fund's tax-exempt status which is conduct how to handle current pension fund. The I.R.S. has permitted emersons in the Mid-Atlantic and Southeastern States through Aug. 31, but what a decision by the Service to re-examine the exempt status of the fund, the Department of Justice has conducted or are by the pension fund, which has $1.4 billion in assets. The Labor Department has issued subpoenas for Mr. Fitzsimmons, William Presser and six other trustees of the fund.

The investigations center on allegations that the fund has made undesirable loans that have not been repaid and loans that were made to persons involved with the fund itself.

S SUE — Sentencing 53 trucking associations. Pinter Bros. Inc., a Deer Park, L.I. trucking company, which filed a class-action suit on behalf of independent companies, charged that the union had contracted with Trucking Employers Inc. to bar motor carriers who had signed the national master freight agreement from subcontracting or interchanging freight with carriers who had not signed it.

The Long Island company, which has been struck by the Teamsters Union for more than two months, also charged that the international union had told its locals not to bargain for contracts with truckers that did not sign and instead to "pick, strike and harass" them.

Warning: The Surgeon General has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health.

Introducing Fact Menthol. The low gas, low 'tar'

Sure, you've tried a low 'tar' menthol to help ease your mind a bit. And with all the talk you hear, that's understandable.

According to some critics of smoking, gases are part of the controversy too.

You see, smoke is mostly gas. Different kinds of gas. And despite what we tobacco people think, these critics say it's just as important to cut down on some of the gases as it is to lower 'tar' and nicotine.

No ordinary menthol cigarette can do it. But Fact can.

Fact is unique, the first cigarette with a revolutionary Purite filter. And Fact reduces gas concentrations at the same time it reduces 'tar' and nicotine.

Meaning you get low gas and low 'tar.' Together.

But that's not all.

Take a minute to read our pack. It tells you how Purite makes this the first low 'tar' menthol with good, rich taste.

And that's a Fact.

Fact is the first cigarette with Purite granules, the selective filtering agent.

Selective. That means it reduces things that taste bad in smoke. Without removing the things that taste good.

So, for the first time, you get a taste you can like in a low 'tar' cigarette.

And that's a fact.

Available in regular and menthol.

Fact: The low gas, low 'tar'

Warning: The Surgeon General has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health.

Regular, 13 mg. "tar," 1.0 mg. nicotine; Menthol, 12 mg. "tar," 0.9 mg. nicotine, av. per cigarette, by FTC method.

Democratic Women to Discuss Party Role With Carter in an Attempt to Avoid a Convention Fight

EN SHANAHAN... STON, July 7... a group of women Democrats will meet in New York City this afternoon to discuss the possibility of an attempt to overturn the decision of the rules committee.

the Democratic Party would commit itself to guaranteeing that half the 1980 convention delegates will be women. Feminists proposed adoption of such a guarantee at the meeting of the Democratic Rules Committee last month, but lost. Instead, the rules committee adopted a rule pledging the party to "promote an equal division" of the 1980 delegates between men and women.

They have still not abandoned the idea of a floor fight. But they hope that they will be able to persuade Mr. Carter, who is virtually assured of being his party's nominee for President, to give them guarantees that women will be fully represented to all party organizations in the future.

Mrs. Horbal, in a telephone interview, said specifically that the feminists have concluded that the exact language of the rules for the 1980 convention "may not be as important as who is going to implement the language, and how."

for, to "promote" equal participation of women. She also mentioned the need for strong feminist representation on what is known as the Winograd commission, led by Morley Winograd, the Michigan State Democratic Chairman. The commission is charged with making recommendations for improving the entire process of selecting convention delegates.

lieutenant governors, Mary Ann Krupskak of New York, Evelyn Gandy of Mississippi and Thelma Stovall of Kentucky. Representative Bella S. Abzug of Manhattan, who, along with Mrs. Horbal, was instrumental in arranging the meeting, will be present. Mrs. Abzug had proposed to Mr. Carter, before the action of the rules committee, that he meet with key Democratic women to hear their ideas on the campaign and on the policies he should follow as President.

in a Carter Administration. The person in the Carter camp who has apparently been the most responsible for successfully arranging the meeting between the women and Mr. Carter has been Patt Derian, who is both Democratic committee member and the party's vice chairman in Mississippi. Mrs. Derian was a Carter supporter from the outset. She has also been an active member of the National Women's Political Caucus, the leading feminist organization that concentrates on politics.

Mrs. Derian, in a telephone interview, refused to take any credit for setting up the meeting, saying, "Jimmy Carter initiated it and that's the truth." She said that long before the rules committee fight Mr. Carter had planned a meeting with leading Democratic women just before the convention. Expected to Attend Among the individuals who are expected to be at the meeting from the Carter staff are Barbara Blum, Mr. Carter's deputy national director; Mary King, the director of women's activities; and Anne Wexler, who represented the Carter forces at the rules committee.

On weekends fly to Boston for beans.

Save more than 30% on Eastern's weekend Air-Shuttle service.

This weekend shuttle up to Beantown for a little sightseeing. You can frolic through Boston Commons. Take a tour of the U.S.S. Constitution in Boston Harbor. Or dig into a seafood dinner in Old City Hall. All this for as little as $46 round-trip any weekend through August 15th. And for your little ones, the fare is even less: Children 2 to 12 fly round-trip for just $31. At these prices you don't have to wait for a special occasion just to visit friends or relatives. All you have to do is catch an outgoing Air-Shuttle flight at 8 pm or later on Friday, and catch a return flight as late as 10 pm on Sunday, the same weekend. On weekends an Air-Shuttle flight leaves LaGuardia almost every hour on the hour to Boston from 8 am to 10 pm. You don't even need a reservation. Just show up. The same $46 is also good on one of our scheduled flights from Newark that require reservations. For more information about Eastern's weekend excursion fares to both Boston and Washington call your travel agent, or call Eastern at 986-5000 in New York or 621-2121 in Newark. ### 2 WOMEN REBUT HOWE IN SEX CASE

Decoys Say Representative Sought Their Favors

SALT LAKE CITY, July 7 (UPI)—Two police-decoys testified today that Representative Allan Howe, Democrat of Utah, brought up the subject of sex after pulling up next to their parked car in Salt Lake City's red-light district last month.

Margaret Hamblin and Kathleen Taylor, special officers who pose as prostitutes for the vice squad, took the stand at a pretrial hearing on the misdemeanor charge of soliciting sex for hire against Mr. Howe.

They said that Mr. Howe, a first-term Representative, stopped his car about two feet from their parked auto and spent 10 to 15 minutes talking through the open windows to Miss Hamblin, eventually offering to pay $20 for sexual favors.

her. "Looking for a little fun." "He didn't say he was looking for a meeting, or looking for some people," asked the prosecutor, Philip Palmer, referring to Mr. Howe's contention that he was lured to the area by an invitation to a political gathering.

"No," said Miss Hamblin. The defense attorney, Dean Mitchell, put the two young women on the stand during a hearing on his motion to dismiss the sex solicitation charge on grounds of police entrapment.

The start of Representative Howe's trial was delayed for a week, until July 19, by City Judge Raymond Uno because of a number of dismissal motions filed by the defense.

Judge Uno asked both the prosecution and the defense to file legal memorandums on the entrapment question before another hearing Monday on pre-trial publicity and the prosecution's comments to newsmen. Mr. Mitchell's questions challenged the accuracy of Miss Hamblin's report of the conversation, the decoys' attire at the time, their training, and their handling of a case involving a policeman arrested for soliciting.

Mrs. Taylor gave testimony that was almost identical to Miss Hamblin's under cross-examination. Mrs. Taylor said that Representative Howe had asked her partner about the physical differences between the two decoys and had suggested they both join him at their place.

The women testified that they asked the Congressman to follow them in his car. He was pulled over a few blocks away by vice squad officers, they said.

Mr. Howe took notes during the two women's testimony and his wife, Marlene, sat beside him.

RECALL IS ISSUED FOR PEANUT BUTTER

WASHINGTON, July 7 (AP)—The Food and Drug Administration today recalled because of contamination with a mold, more than 19,000 jars of peanut butter distributed on the East Coast.

The F.D.A. said the recall affected Pantry Pride and Sweet-life peanut butter, both smooth and chunky, in jars of 12, 18, 40 and 48 ounces. The product is manufactured by Pennco Foods, a division of Food Fair

Inc. of Philadelphia. The peanut butter from centers in New Jersey, Md., Florida, is contaminated with a mold, which occurs on peanuts. The mold is considered a serious health hazard. The Pantry Pride in the recall comes in the recall cases: 12076 and ounce; 12146, 12126, 12136, 12126 and 12136, 11266, 48 ounce, product in the 1 numbers 12126, 12136, all 40 ounce

Municipal Credit Union Financial Condition Excellent

The State of New York Banking Department and the credit union's independent audit arm have just released their independent reports of their separate, most recent examinations of the assets, books and records of the Municipal Credit Union. The Officers and Directors of the Credit Union have reasons to be extremely proud of their findings.

The Municipal Credit Union continues its vigorous growth pattern and dynamic progress. Despite an economy disrupted by runaway inflation, personal bankruptcies and civil service lay-offs, the Credit Union has managed to remain fiscally healthy.

Some of the indices of this vital institution's improved status are:

- Providing important services to more than 104,000 New York civil servants' families which includes loans to approximately 50,000 members each year.
- 99% of share portfolio in personal loans to members at the rate of 11.72% per annum, simple interest.
- 3% ratio of delinquent loans to total outstanding loans; average for other credit unions in MCIU's class is 4%+.
- 6 1/2% dividend on savings per annum compounded quarterly has been maintained.
- $1,660,557 net operating earnings for quarter ending March 31, 1976.
- 35.7% ratio (approximate) of expenses-to-earnings; not unreasonably high considering MCIU's size.
- MCIU's own electronic data processing system; establishment schedule delayed by substantial hardware and software modifications to create expanded more efficient capabilities.

New York is bouncing back to full fiscal viability and will always have a considerable complement of employees. Civil Servants, therefore, will always have their MCIU. Astute dedicated policymakers, vigorous professional managers and loyal employees have already proved themselves. Applied to existing potentials, these vital elements are the basis for optimism in the Municipal Credit Union's continued success.

Police Polish Democratic Convention Plans

By SELWYN RAAS
Daniel Courtenay has tried to anticipate everything—even the threat of a subterranean attack on the Democratic National Convention.

"I can't afford to be surprised," said Mr. Courtenay, who is an assistant chief and the police commander in charge of the city's elaborate security arrangements for the convention. "It's not likely, but there is always the possibility of someone using the sewers or the underground conduit system."

For nine months Chief Courtenay has been devising plans for the blue police screen that will be provided in the streets outside Madison Square Garden next week from Monday through Thursday.

'Battle Maps' and Codes
Chief Courtenay's 13th-floor office at Police Headquarters is cluttered with the final "battle maps" and police deployment schedules for the convention. The maps—shaded in hues of red, blue, pink, orange and brown—detail in code how car and pedestrian movements will be restricted, where protesters will be confined and where 1,500 uniformed and plainclothes officers in the streets around the Garden—Seventh and Eighth Avenues, and 31st and 33d Streets—will be assigned.

The months of planning by Chief Courtenay and his aides have one major goal: to insure that 4,800 delegates and alternate delegates can enter and leave the Garden safely while almost a million people go about their daily business outside.

Several groups have announced plans to demonstrate near the Garden but the police are uncertain how large or intensive these protests will be. The police security plan, however, includes these major restrictions:

DEMONSTRATIONS—No rallies, picketing or protests will be permitted on sidewalks adjacent to the Garden. All demonstrations will be confined to sidewalks across the street from the Garden or farther away. These protest areas are: 31st and 33d Streets between Eighth and Ninth Avenues; the west side of Eighth Avenue between 31st and 33d Streets; the east side of Seventh Avenue between 30th and 31st Streets; and a portion of 32d Street between the Avenue of the Americas and Seventh Avenue. It is still uncertain whether demonstrators will be permitted by the Postal Service to use the steps of the main post office on the west side of Eighth Avenue directly across the street from the Garden.

PEDESTRIANS—All sidewalks adjacent to the Garden—the east side of Eighth Avenue, the west side of Seventh Avenue, the north side of 31st Street and the south side of 33d Street—will be closed to pedestrians. Additionally, the north side of 33d Street, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues, will be closed frequently because of the arrival there by buses of delegates from their hotels. "For all intents and purposes, 31st and 33d Streets will be off-limits to pedestrians," Chief Courtenay warned.

SUBWAYS AND LONG ISLAND RAIL ROAD—Except for a passageway leading directly to the main concourse of the Garden, all entrances and exits of subway stations and the Long Island Rail Road are expected to remain open. Chief Courtenay said other entrances and exits would be shut only if unusual crowd problems should occur on the streets.

CARS AND TRUCKS—Car and truck traffic will be restricted from 31st and 33d Streets between Seventh and Eighth Avenues. In an effort to keep traffic moving as rapidly as possible on Seventh and Eighth Avenues, the police will be strictly enforcing parking regulations on the avenues and nearby streets. Police Department tow trucks also will be out in force to remove illegally parked cars, police officials said.

Chief Courtenay said in a recent interview, that there had been no indication that the area near the Garden would be "invaded" by prostitutes or pickpockets during the convention. No pre-convention street-sweeps, or roundups by the police have been planned, he asserted.

Security inside the Garden will be handled by private guards working for the Democratic Party and by the Secret Service, which is in charge of security for candidates. A small reserve unit of uniformed police officers, however, will be available inside the convention hall.

Noting that each officer assigned to the convention has undergone a one-day refresher session in "sensitivity training," Chief Courtenay said: "We fully expect that emotions will get high, especially the days are hot and humid. We've tried to explain how not to overreact and how to respond to problems as a group of professionals as opposed to uncoordinated individuals."

Last September when he was chosen to work out the security arrangements, Chief Courtenay was second in command of the department's Organized Crime Control Bureau. The 50-year-old policeman formerly was chief of the Narcotics Division and commanding officer of the Bronx Tactical Patrol Force.

As part of his own training, Chief Courtenay said that he had walked over every inch of the Garden and the miles of streets adjacent to the sports complex "countless times" in the last nine months. "I know every hole in the streets, every subway entrance, every building and every sewer plate," he said.

$2.6 Million Federal Grant
The assignment of 1,500 officers to the convention, police officials said, will not reduce normal coverage at precincts in the city. Officers transferred to the convention presumably will be replaced by other officers working overtime and paid through a $2.6 million Federal grant to the city.

"I know some people think we're praying for four days of torrential rain to keep every thing quiet, but that is not so," said Chief Courtenay. "People have a right to demonstrate as long as they're orderly, and we're not losing any sleep over that."

"The convention gives us a chance to prove that the police and the city can deal with anything without any serious problems," he added.

By CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times
PLAINS, Ga., July 7—Senator John Glenn of Ohio will come here tomorrow afternoon to be the third man to discuss the Democratic Vice-Presidential nomination with Jimmy Carter, the certain Presidential candidate of the party, and Representative Peter W. Rodino Jr. of New Jersey may also be asked to undergo such an examination by Mr. Carter.

Mr. Carter, who met Monday with Senator Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, will meet tomorrow morning with Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, as previously announced.

Jody Powell, Mr. Carter's press secretary, said today that Senator Glenn, the first American astronaut to orbit the earth, 14 years ago, would arrive tomorrow afternoon after Senator Mondale has finished his discussion with Mr. Carter. Mr. Powell also confirmed that Mr. Carter's close confidant, Charles Kirbo, an Atlanta attorney, was meeting in Washington today with Mr. Rodino to assess the suitability of the 67-year-old chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, for the Vice-Presidency.

The press spokesman added that it was "safe to assume that he and Governor Carter will be talking at some point along the way," but he did not confirm that Mr. Rodino, who won acclaim for his conduct at the impeachment hearings of President Nixon in 1974, would be invited for a full-scale, face-to-face meeting with the former Georgia Governor.

This will probably not be viewed as a fatal flaw by labor leaders as a whole, one of them said in Washington, and Mr. Carter's own labor record is not one of slavish devotion to the unions.

Mr. Rodino's friends have advanced the argument that his age is an advantage in that, at 67, he would probably be a one-term Vice President. This, they argue, would permit Mr. Carter four years to select carefully a second running mate in 1980 as his choice as successor to the party leadership.

Also, Mr. Rodino is believed to have undergone searching scrutiny by the Nixon White House at the time of the impeachment in the hope the hearings could be discredited by the revelation of some derogatory information. The fact that none was revealed is an asset.

However, his knowledge of antitrust law and other specialties of the judiciary committee is not supplemented by any real expertise in foreign policy and other subjects. To many in Washington he would not be considered one of the really serious possibilities.

Two Believed Out
Senator Glenn also lacks broad experience or background in foreign affairs.

One Senator who does, Frank Church of Idaho, was said by two Georgia journalists today to have been "eliminated" and Senator Adlai E. Stevenson III of Illinois appears to have been nearly ruled out of contention.

Some speculation and questions have arisen about the elaborate process is using, not merely gate vice Presidents but also identities of the until each individual is arranged.

Cynics argue that the really serious possibilities. It seems clear that the public to thoughtful and word, "prudent" nomination so little excuse, and he is of the fiasco in when Senator T of Missouri had as the Democrat

Atlanta Vanguard Opens Beachhead in Americana

By MAURICE CARROLL
The red-and-white quilt was neatly folded yesterday on the four-poster bed where Jimmy Carter will sleep during the Democratic convention. Twenty-five Olympia typewriters were stacked next to Isabel Hyde in the press area. Steve Elkin berated a sluggish trucking company into unearthing two big blow-ups of the candidate's picture that had been mislaid.

"Welcome to Atlanta East," said Barry Jagoda, the television coordinator, as the vanguard of the 350-member staff that will help to smooth Jimmy Carter's path to the Democratic nomination for President moved into the Americana Hotel.

"There's no real problem," said Jim Gammill, the Carter convention coordinator, "except for having one Governor Carter and one Jody Powell and one Ham Jordan and I don't know how many hundred people who think they have to see each of them."

The Carter people will use space on at least six floors of the Americana and will spill over into two hotels nearby. When they take the Presidential nomination back to Georgia late next week, they will have spent $350,000 on their convention operations, they estimate.

Mr. Carter and his family are expected to arrive late Saturday. Although his schedule thereafter is still unsettled, the process of shifting the Carter-for-President campaign from its home base in Atlanta for a one-week stand in New York was well under way yesterday.

"Day by day," said Mr. Jagoda, as he conducted an informal tour of the temporary territory, "you get typewriters, telephones, wire machines and a few people—the scheduling people—in on Thursday, everything else in on Friday, the Carter family on Saturday. Sunday is a busy day, and then there's the convention."

A broad-shouldered hotel security man blocked the entrance yesterday to the candidate's quarters on the northern end of the 21st floor, and young Secret Service agents soon began poking about the four-room suite. When the Carters are there, the hotel elevators will be programmed so that riders cannot get off on that floor.

Couches confronting semi-circles of chairs stand at each end of the big, blue-carpeted living room in the Carter suite. There are Hudson River prints on the wall of the small dining area. A canopied four-poster double bed is in the candidate's bedroom. Another, bigger bedroom with twin beds will probably be used as an auxiliary office, according to Mr. Jagoda.

Mr. Carter's mother and his three grown sons and their wives will have rooms nearby. Other staff members will be on the 19th and 20th floors. Of the top-level staff, the campaign manager, Gerald Rafterson, the advertising chief, and Patrick Caddell, the pollster, had checked in by yesterday. Some of the early staff arrival were assigned rooms in the Wellington Hotels nearby.

Mr. Gammill and his team were working in a fifth-floor office.

The press office is on the second floor and has a working pressroom where convention briefings will be given by Mr. Powell, the press secretary, and Rex Granum, described as a "principal spokesman."

There will be an auxiliary press operation in a trailer at the rotunda at Madison Square Garden, 20 blocks to the south, where the convention will be held. But the main Carter press area will remain in the Americana.

In the Americana basement, the cavernous Albert

Hall will be the administrative center, devoted in large part to keeping track of delegates. The Carter campaign staff counted 1,873 yesterday (leaving considerable room for slippage, since only 1,505 are needed to nominate), but there is no disposition, apparently, to relax.

There was a beguiling mixture of attitudes among these early Carter-for-President arrivals—that seemed to be cold-eyed calculation and a sort of easygoing amusement at the whole complicated logistical process.

"A lot of us," Mr. Gammill said, "have an idea of how to do this. So we're doing it and looking forward"—with great, if somewhat detached, interest, he indicated—"to seeing how it turns out."

Bicentennial Windfall for Ford

W. APPLE JR. The New York Times

ATON, July 7—It is hard to imagine a political windfall for a President than the celebration of the Bicentennial this week, which gave Gerald R. Ford a priceless opportunity to play the role of national leader rather than candidate scrambling for reputation by his name-in-a-lifetime occurrence.

At the encampment on trains at Valley Forge, the President's Operation Sail in and at the natural monuments at Monticello, the President—not Jimmy Carter—stood in the spotlight and audible to thousands in person and millions on television.

At an even remotely impact, Mr. Reagan turned to buying television night in which to other things, his meaning of the day. He was invisible on the Bicentennial played to Mr. Reagan. He and his concluded months had no chance of Mr. Reagan as a candidate, they fits by acting President that was what he was able to do on Sunday teaching the lessons of the American past and the goals of the American future, functioning as a symbol of national unity, presiding, in effect, at the Federal birthday party.

Sincerity and Modesty

If his speech at Philadelphia lacked the power and the insight of Thomas Jefferson, the Founding Father most vividly associated with the Bicentennial, it was among Mr. Ford's more effectively presentations, largely free of the banality and the stumbling delivery that have marked much of his campaign oratory.

"Liberty is a living flame to be fed, not a dead ashes to be revered, not even in a Bicentennial year," he said in Philadelphia. "It is fitting that we ask ourselves many questions even on a glorious day like today."

It all fitted nicely with the picture Mr. Ford has tried to project of himself and his Presidency—as a sincere and human endeavor, devoted to unity rather than confrontation, modest enough not to claim to have all the answers or the resources to provide all the solutions.

Thus, although he said nothing overtly political, the political content was inescapable.

"The hardest part of winning over the uncommitted delegates," conceded a Reagan staff member, "is getting them to abandon the President. They're perfectly willing to turn their backs on Jerry Ford, but they find it hard to snub a President—that man who spoke for the whole country on our 200th birthday. I think Sunday was one of his best days in months.

In a little-noticed episode, the President Ford Committee saw to it that the point was not lost on one key bloc of uncommitted delegates—the holdouts in New York State.

Like businessmen wooing prospects with tickets to the hot Broadway show of the moment, Ford operatives provided seats on the flight deck of the U.S.S. Forrestal—the best vantage point for viewing Operation Sail—for at least seven of the New York delegates.

Roger C. R. Morton, the chairman of the President Ford Committee, told Andrew J. Glass of the Cox Newspapers on Sunday that 15 delegates, including some from New Jersey, were on the Forrestal. But he amended that figure today through a spokesman.

Tonight, at the President's state dinner for Queen Elizabeth II of England, another major Bicentennial event, a political note intruded quietly. Among the Administration officials, Congressional leaders, show-business personalities and journalists on the guest list was the name of Clark Reed, chairman of the pivotal Mississippi delegation to the national convention, which at the moment favors Mr. Reagan.

Would a delegate sell his vote for a better view of the tall ships? Hardly. But Mr. Ford's ability to provide it, like his own participation in the major events of the day, added to his aura of legitimacy and authority, which remains his best hope of combating Mr. Reagan's nerve and ideological intensity in their final battle for nomination.

'HIDDEN' BACKERS OF FORD TURN UP

the uncommitted, 13 are known to lean to Mr. Ford.

The competition for delegates has become so intense that an uncommitted Manhattan delegate, Ralph DeBlasio, who is leaning to the President, successfully petitioned the Ford campaign committee for three highly prized tickets to the USS Forrestal reviewing stand for Operation Sail last Sunday.

"They were for V.I.P.'s, and I'm a V.I.P. now," said Mr. DeBlasio, the Greenwich Village Republican district leader.

Richard M. Rosenbaum, the New York Republican state chairman and Vice President Rockefeller's chief political agent in the state, has been mounting the most pressure on behalf of the President.

He in turn has been courted by the Ford Administration by appointments with various Cabinet officials and an invitation to last evening's state dinner for Queen Elizabeth at the White House.

Mr. Rosenbaum has been using the argument that the party cannot reject an incumbent President, and that Mr. Ford would be a stronger candidate in New York than would Ronald Reagan and thus be of greater help—or less damaging—to local Republican candidates for Congress and the Legislature.

An unspoken pressure on the uncommitted delegates is party loyalty and the desire to go along with the overwhelming majority of the New York delegates, who are backing the President.

The Rosenbaum arguments are apparently working among most of the uncommitted delegates. Now considered to be committed to the President or leaning in his direction are the six delegates in two Suffolk Congressional Districts, three in Brooklyn and three in Amsterdam, Scotia and Oswego.

The three pro-Ford delegates in Suffolk County, party and appointments with various public officials widely agreed that six delegates in two districts would join a seventh, John P. Campbell, who was backing Mr. Reagan. Sources ready leaning to Mr. Ford. The predictions were supported by the canvass of the delegates, using a general ledger to Mr. Ford.

In Scotia, a Schenectady suburb, a previously uncommitted delegate, H. Richard Lewis, chairman of the county Board of Representatives, said that he was supporting Mr. Ford. Earlier, his county leader, Edward Cammarota, said he favored the President, and that Mr. Lewis had told him he was leaning to Mr. Ford.

The shifts left as still uncommitted delegate, J. Gregory Merriam, the Oswego County chairman. He said that R. Flynn of Queens, City Councilman Frank J. Biondillo of Staten Island, State Senator Fred J. Eckert and James White, both of Rochester, and Leonard P. Markert Jr. of Manhattan, all but Mr. Wilson and Mr. Flynn had been counted as pro supporters of Mr. Ford at the May meeting, but said in interviews that they were uncommitted.

"Some of those Reagan people are pretty hot," he said.

Wallace Will Address Convention on Tuesday

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 7 (UPI)—Gov. George C. Wallace will address the Democratic National Convention Tuesday night on "Government Reform and Business Accountability," Wallace aides said today.

Mr. Wallace is expected to sound his familiar warnings concerning a growing Federal bureaucracy and will also touch on the relationship between business and government, aides said.

Mr. Wallace's press secretary, Billy Joe Camp, said that the Alabama Governor had been invited to speak by the Democratic national chairman, Robert S. Strauss, and by Jimmy Carter, the apparent Presidential nominee.

Mr. Wallace, whose own Presidential campaign was smashed by Carter victories in Southern primaries, does not plan to have his name placed in nomination at the convention.

Dees Asks Funds to Study Transition

LEN WEAVER Jr. The New York Times

ATON, July 7—Jim Dees, general counsel of the Committee for Jimmy Carter, told a commission hearing that the Democratic candidate might want to begin studying transition activities between the Ford Administration and his before the election, when Federal funds for that purpose first become available.

$200,000 Spending Seen

Mr. Dees said that a candidate "should not be discouraged from undertaking pre-election transition studies, the purpose of which is not to further his election but rather to facilitate an orderly transfer of power if he wins." He estimated Mr. Carter might spend up to $200,000 on such studies.

In 1963, Congress provided that a non-incumbent candidate who won the election could receive up to $900,000 to meet the cost of organizing and staffing his Administration between his election and inauguration.

In campaign law amendments enacted last May, Congress exempted legal and accounting costs necessary to comply with the law from candidates' spending ceilings for the primary elections. Logically, Mr. Dees argued, they should also fall outside the general election ceiling and the accompanying subsidy.

Deadline on Expenses

Under the present law, general election subsidy money cannot be used for any campaign expense incurred after Dec. 2, a month after the election. Mr. Dees said that Carter campaign would probably not finish paying its bills and balancing its books for another six months and would need money to continue that process, which would have to come from private contributions.

Mr. Gilbert supported all the Carter requests and added the suggestion that private donations be used to finance travel abroad by candidates.

The hearing was held to consider a new 20-page commission regulation setting out guidelines for the general election. It will be submitted in final form to Congress later this summer and go into effect automatically 30 working days later unless disapproved by either house.

Milwaukee Integration Plan Approved

THE NEW YORK TIMES

MILWAUKEE—A desegregation plan for Milwaukee's public schools was approved today by a federal judge and is to take effect in September.

The plan is largely voluntary, but it includes provisions for involuntary transfers through random selection or by lot.

Even with this provision, the plan places a greater burden on black students than white. It calls for the assignment of 8,000 black students to schools outside their neighborhoods, either voluntarily or involuntarily, while only about 2,600 white students would be assigned outside their neighborhoods.

The attorneys for the plaintiffs in the lawsuit representing black children, it "a little difficult" to see that had been approved by both sides, the judge calls for desegregation of the city's 158 public schools to be completed by September 1977 and under in September.

Schools would be desegregated by the creation of "specialty" schools in the city. Nineteen of the 68 schools this year would be 25 percent to 45 percent black. There is now a 35 percent black enrollment among the 114,000 pupils in Milwaukee's schools.

Aware that not enough students may voluntarily agree to attend the magnet schools, the plan includes provisions for involuntary transfers through random selection or by lot.

"If we had to choose only one advertising medium The New York Times would be it."

Warren Peters,
president of Four Winds
Travel, Inc.

"Four Winds has run escorted, deluxe tours to all parts of the world for nearly 20 years. We attribute our success to our practice of advertising directly to consumers and to our heavy and consistent use of The New York Times to do the preselling before our customers go to travel agents.

"The Times's influence on the national travel market is unmatched. It reaches the most active travelers all over the country, and, of course, completely dominates the important New York area. Coupon returns from The Times come in regularly at one of the lowest costs of all media—and the actual sales conversion rate is extraordinary.

"The Times's large travel agent readership is another plus. Since The Times Travel section is the definitive travel information source for their customers, travel agents must read it. It's more valuable to them than all the travel trade publications combined.

"There is no doubt that without the access The Times provides to the entire travel market, we couldn't have started our business, nor could we have stayed in business."

Experimental Jazz: By Various Groups Fills Studio Rivbea... Studio Rivbea, at 24 Bond Street, is presenting another of its 10-day jazz festivals. Two groups are performing each evening through Saturday, with two saxophonists, Marion Brown and Charles Tyler, appearing tonight. Jazz at Rivbea is more experimental than most of the music heard at the Newport Jazz Festival, but the groups are carefully chosen and the level of musicianship is consistently very high. On Tuesday, New Delta Ahkri performed several intriguing compositions by the group's leader, Leo Smith. Mr. Smith is a trumpet player who was born in the Mississippi Delta and became a leading light of the Chicago jazz community in the 1960's. His music reflects these roots. It is thoughtful, with themes appearing in the middle of improvisations and solo growing out of themes, in the manner of much new jazz from the Middle West. And it retains the emotional immediacy of Mississippi blues, especially when Mr. Smith and the group's saxophonist, Oliver Lake, engage in energetic musical conversations. A quartet led by Arthur Blythe also performed at Studio Rivbea on Tuesday. Mr. Blythe wrests a huge, penetrating sound from his alto saxophone. He plays quite freely in terms of harmony, but he uses the rhythmic content of his compositions as rigorously as more conventional improvisers use chord sequences. With the disciplined power of an extraordinary drummer, Steve Reid, behind him, Mr. Blythe creates a strong, deliberate brand of jazz. ROBERT PALMER

Jefferson Starship Show Delights Throng in Park

The New York Times/Bob Glass

The Jefferson Starship brought out at crowd estimated at 60,000 to the Great Lawn of Central Park yesterday. All listened, some sought better vantage points, and a few danced. And when the rains held things up for a while, it reminded many of Woodstock.

By JOHN ROCKWELL
The Jefferson Starship brought its songs of miracles, rabbits and revolution to Central Park's Great Lawn yesterday. It was the fourth annual free concert there by the San Francisco rock group, courtesy once again not only of the band but also of WNEW, which presented the program, and RCA

Records, which contributed appreciably toward it. It was a delightful event, but it can't be said that the delight derived from the weather. The rain cut down the crowd (one police officer estimated 60,000, but that seemed generous), delayed the scheduled 8 o'clock beginning for an hour and occasioned a 25-minute pause in the middle of the set, which finally ended at 3:30. The pleasure came, instead, from the sheer quality of the music. The band's personnel has shifted steadily since the Airplane days of a decade ago. At present the Starship consists of Grace Slick, still as hard and harsh and unsteady about pitch as ever, but a nice up-front focus for the crowd; Marty Balin, second only to Neil Young's idiosyncratic rock tenor; Craig Chaquico, whose sweetly sinuous lead guitar playing is really something special; Paul Kantner, the rhythm guitarist who provides a link to the Airplane's earliest days; Pete Sears and David Freiberg, who trade off the bass and keyboard chores, with equal finesse; and John Barbata, who drums solidly and with sophistication.

It's easy to be cynical about free concerts in the midst of the dour 1970's. WNEW enhances its image with these live broadcasts, after all, and the band doesn't harm its own reputation as a survivor from the 60's by giving free concerts. It also gleams a good deal of publicity from it; the free concerts happen in New York, after all, not Dayton. And RCA stands to sell a lot of records. But cynicism can be overdone, especially when one reduces the focus of one's perceptions to the simple relationship between musicians playing and demonstrably enjoying themselves and a muddy but happy crowd. "Welcome to our re-creation of Woodstock," cracked Mr. Kantner backstage during the rain break, and he had a point. It was possible to be cynical about Woodstock, too, but it was still an inspiring symbol, and so was yesterday's concert.

Met's Ballet Troupe Bows Tomorrow in New London

The Metropolitan Opera Ballet Ensemble, a 14-dancer troupe from within the 29-member ballet company at the Met, will make its debut as an independent performing unit tomorrow and Saturday at the American Dance Festival in New London, Conn. Anthony A. Bliss, executive director of the Metropolitan Opera, said the new ensemble had two objectives—"to provide employment weeks for the dancers when they can't be utilized fully" by the Met and "to provide greater dance opportunity for the dancers we have in the company."

Agreeing that this repertory ranged from ballet to Broadway show dancing to modern dance, Mr. Vesak said his sole policy was to be "a humanist."

Under the arrangement, the Met is seeking to offer outside employment weeks at full salary that under the present contract would have been cut or reduced to half-salary. The new company, as a touring group with lecture demonstrations, will get the "income-producing aspect" in the form of fees.

Not Step to Opera Ballet
Mr. Bliss stressed that at the moment the formation of the unit was "not a prelude to creating a Metropolitan Opera Ballet" to the sense that European companies such as the Bolshoi Ballet and the Paris Opera Ballet exist as ballet companies within an opera house complex. Nor are separate all-ballet evenings at the Met being envisaged. Such all-ballet programs were offered in the 1930's, when George Balanchine's and Lincoln Kirstein's American Ballet became the opera's ballet unit, and more recently, in the late 1960's, when Alicia Markova was artistic director of the opera's ballet ensemble. More usually, the dancers appear in the ballet diversifications of the operas.

Prize and Prejudice
Lord & Taylor is obviously proud of the city's landmark buildings, judging by its window display today through July 21 of oil paintings by Letizia Pittigliani. The artist's own civic pride is reflected in her realistic depiction of such historic edifices as the Tweed Courthouse, the Chrysler Building, Grand Central Terminal, the Empire State Building and other structures.

Vine & Vibe
Now in its sixth year, Dionysos shows no signs of lagging as a showcase-restaurant rooted in Greek ambience, music and cheer. This is an attractive place, nestling behind a pyramid-shaped canopy at 304 East 45th Street (off Second Avenue). Song-and-dance activities start about 9:30 P.M. Monday through Saturday (over on Sunday—closed), with vocal cover charge. Minutes after the smiling host seated one couple the other night, he was leading a line of gliding waiters to the music of Stellos and the Athenians.

Chorus Lines
"Show Tunes of Two Continents" is tonight's free concert at 8 o'clock in New York University's Education Theater at 35 West Fourth Street (off Washington Square). The performers are graduate students of the N.Y.U. Music School under the baton of John V. Gilbert. The event is part of the university's third annual "Summer Arts at the Square" series.

Uptown, from 5 to 7 P.M. at Lincoln Center Plaza, the 35-voice female choir from Marseilles, the Maitrise Gabrielle Fauré (named for the composer), will present a program ranging from 16th-century motets of French and international folk songs.

Weekly performances are Thursday through Sunday on Pier 17 at Fulton Street and the East River, down the block from the South Street Seaport Museum. Thursday-Saturday admission is $2.50; on Sunday, $2. Reservations: 242-3900.

Dance: 'Shadowplay'

2 Ballet Theater Casts in Tudor Work - Tcherkassky and Ward Make Debut

By ANNA KISSELGOF

There are many layers of meaning in Antony Tudor's ballet "Shadowplay," which had its first performances of the season Tuesday night and yesterday afternoon with American Ballet Theater at the State Theater.

There were two casts. At the mainline, Charles Ward was seen for the first time as the young hero and Marianna Tcherkassky made her debut as his temptress. Clark Tippet was the male guru-initiator. At the first performance, the cast of Fernando Bujones as the hero, with Hilida Morales and Vladimir Gelman in the other principal roles.

Much of what the audience sees in "Shadowplay" depends upon its own sophistication and ability to feel at home with symbolism. But these perceptions also depend upon how clearly the dancers communicate the meaning of Mr. Tudor's gestures and dramatic intent.

At its most direct, "Shadowplay" concerns a young man who is taught the facts of life by a man, then a woman. Yet it is not Mr. Tudor's way to be that direct, and he has cast the ballet in an Oriental mold, with many motifs from Asian dance.

Yet "Shadowplay" is also a stylized depiction of a ritual, of orite de passage into manhood, and on still another level, a statement that shows man to be the highest of the species and yet still related, perhaps in his baser instincts, to his animal forebears.

The punch line tells all. The young man has vanquished his enemies in the jungle. He assumes his signet ring of nobility and meditative retreat amid the monkey-like characters who surround him and "ape" him. And he also scratches his armpit.

Mr. Bujones has always captured the quizzing image of the hero, his dancing strong and he always takes care to distinguish the boy's nobler character from his simian surroundings. Mr. Gelman has a dramatic presence as the embodiment of the male principle, but Miss Morales, weak in technique here, seems too innocent.

In the other cast, Mr. Ward made a fine debut. He knows what the role is about, and when he will not be preoccupied with the partnering difficulties, he will be perfect. Even now, the male duet with Mr. Tippet's outstanding male guru was courageously explicit and therefore highly dramatic. Miss Tcherkassky had all the mystery of the seductress one could have hoped for.

Tuesday's and yesterday's program also presented two performances of Fokine's "Les Sylphides," with Natalia Makarova and Ivan Nagy catching the dreamlike loose classicism of the leading couple to perfection. Eleanor D'Antuono's skittering burlesques in the afternoon performance were absolutely remarkable and Mr. Bujones had a cool classicism to his dancing. Both programs also offered a flaming "Don Quixote" pas de deux with Mr. Nagy and Miss Makarova.

Leaving perhaps the treat of Tuesday for last, one should mention Mikhail Baryshnikov's and Miss Tcherkassky's remarkable performance in Fokine's "Le Spectre de la Rose." Somehow they bring this fin-de-siècle romanticism to life, and its perfume does reach us.

Music: Student Concert

Chorus and Musicians of the Universal Academy Perform at Carnegie Hall

By ALLEN HUGHES

In a program that included Haydn's Symphony No. 38, Mozart's Mass in C (K. 317) along with choral arrangements of spirituals and band works by Hanson, Sousa and others, the chorus and band made the best impressions.

Mr. Ramsey had the young singers performing energetically and with precision on pitch and diction, and the band instrumentalists played confidently under Mr. Dalby's direction. The orchestra was weak and indicated that the efficiency of the players of string instruments was not very high.

The educational value of all this mass music-making is probably not great, but the wholesomeness of the activity may compensate for artistic limitations.

In the six years that Lynn Geddes has been operating his University Academy for Music, which has its headquarters in Princeton, N. J., it has become a big business. This summer, more than 900 high-school students from across the country are enrolled in the two choruses, two bands and orchestra that went off to Europe this week after rehearsing for a few days and giving a pair of concerts at Carnegie Hall.

These are mostly sons and daughters of affluent families, since they have to pay sizable fees to participate in this combined travel and music activity, which is called "America's Youth in Concert."

The first contingents of the 1976 group gave their Carnegie Hall concert on Monday night, after which they immediately got on planes that started them off on their three-week European tours. The Monday chorus was led by Gerald Mack, of the Hartt College of Music, and the Monday band by Frank Pierol, of the University of Iowa.

In the Tuesday concert, the chorus was directed by William Ramsey, of Stanford University, the orchestra by Leonard Rumery, of Los Angeles, and the band by Max Dalby of Utah State University. The Tuesday performers left for Europe immediately afterward.

An Antidote to Futuriasis

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT

FUTURE FACTS. A Forecast of the World as We Will Know It Before the End of the Century. By Stephen Rosen. Illustrations by Chartmakers Inc. 535 pages. Simon & Schuster, $14.95.

Do you find it hard to believe that you may some day soon be able to travel from New York to Los Angeles by subway in 21 minutes? Or that some time before the year 2000 we could be getting edible protein from cow manure, garbage, sewage sludge and old rubber tires? Or that the ability to speak a new language may eventually be acquired by means of a chemical injection? Well, I certainly found such predictions incredible when I read them in Stephen Rosen's "Future Facts: A Forecast of the World as We Will Know It Before the End of the Century." But among the more than 300 predictions that Mr. Rosen made when he completed "Future Facts" in 1975, enough have already "come true" to make even the wildly implausible seem possible. (For instance, many newspapers are already using video typewriters and computerized phototypesetting, and we know that the conversion of sunlight to electricity and heat is technically feasible if not yet economically practical.) So assuming that all goes well and there is a future, we may well soon be discussing the children in Urdu as we sit down to our rubber-tire fortified dinners.

Inflatable suspenders, invented by a West German to protect a child near water.

"Future Facts," according to Mr. Rosen, who is a management consultant trained in the astrophysics of cosmic radiation, "are systems-in-motion—products, services, processes or ideas—that are (1) at least one year away from mass-market realization (remember, this was written in 1975); (2) likely to 'succeed' after they appear; (3) probably important future influences on the average man-in-the-street; (4) selected because they're probably 'interesting' to read about. They are, in short, facts with a future."

Futurizing the Carboholics

Of course, some are more interesting to read about than others. I believe I can wait for a future that will bring spurs that will enable one to climb uphill on skis (what's wrong with a proper wax job?), inflatable suspenders designed to hold pants up on children and children up in the water, self-lighting cigarettes, three-dimensional television, plastic stationery that tear stains won't smudge and words such as "alimony drone" ("self-indulgent, indolent divorcee who lives on alimony"), "carboholic" ("a compulsive eater") and "futurizing" ("giving a future dimension to"), all of which are being considered for inclusion in Merriam dictionaries.

That garlic is "a powerful pesticide" does not strike me as a "future fact"; it was long ago that a New Hampshire woman told me about rubbing garlic on your skin to ward off black flies (of course, it wards off people as well). And though I can see their benefit, several other of Mr. Rosen's forecasts sound like projects dreamed up by Lewis Carroll's White Knight—among them, putting smoke rings to work to clear polluted skies, towing icebergs from the Antarctic to Africa, Australia and the United States to be melted for fresh water, and using ultrasound as a potential rat contraceptive.

Awesome, Interesting Predictions

But many of the predictions in Mr. Rosen's collection are not only interesting but also awesome. There are more prospective solutions to the energy crisis than Barry Commoner can shake a stick at—including solar power from satellites, hydrogen manufactured by algae and sunlight, sodium-powered fuel cells, and even a scheme to harness the black holes in the universe. There's the possibility of drugs to block viral cancer, techniques to increase the human life span, a device to soften sonic boom and a "supertlywheel" that will make electric cars competitive with gasoline-driven ones.

In fact, you wax positively optimistic about the future while browsing in "Future Facts," for it seems there's no problem for which there isn't a solution on the drawing boards—whether it's tracking down oil-spill culprits by means of "magnetic dust" that gives liquid cargoes a distinctive "fingerprint" or curing obesity with electrical brain stimulation.

Unless of course you're by nature an "apocalyptic" ("one who predicts devastating calamities") or suffering hopelessly from "futuritis" ("a morbid fixation on or fear of the future"). In which case you can do to "Future Facts" what one elderly shopper is reported here to have done to a display in Cartier's that showed a band that seemed to extend from the window offering a diamond ring and bracelets to passers-by: sweat it with an umbrella and call it "the devil's work."

Boston Police and Firemen To Fight Residency Law

BOSTON, July 7 (AP)—Boston police and firefighter unions say they will challenge a law that requires any city employees hired or promoted after July 1, 1976, to be a Boston resident. The measure, signed yesterday by Mayor Kevin H. White, was approved earlier by the Boston City Council. "We view this as an irresponsible restriction on the terms of our employment," said Chester Broderick, president of the Boston Patrolman's Association. Neither Mr. Broderick nor A. Michael Mullane, president of the Boston Firefighters Union, Local 718, would specify their planned route of appeal.

The war was over and America could look forward to THE BEST YEARS 1945-1950 by Joseph C. Goulden

"A collage of memories... a Bayeux Tapestry of the ruptured duck and Chiquita Banana"

*"Revives those years for those who lived them and gracefully introduces them to the younger and less fortunate . . . To call Goulden's effort 'workmanlike' is praise too faint, because his skill at writing and remembering is as artistic as it is concise. Goulden shows with vivid human and statistical detail how VJ Day opened the door to Fibber McGee's closet, spilling out the deferred dreams of a generation . . . If you listen closely, you can hear Senator Claghorn's drawl. And on a clear day, or at least on page 153, you can see Lamont Cranston."
—New York Times Book Review

"Not only superbly readable history, and quite the equal of Frederick Lewis Allen's classic Only Yesterday, it is also a great morality play . . . Goulden writes with the freshness and immediacy of one who was much older and savvy and right at the center of things at the time."
—Chicago Sun Times

"Mr. Goulden's performance is an admirable one, replete with color and excitement, great achievement and dark despair, the stuff of history on which later chroniclers will draw with gratitude and which we may enjoy today."
—Book-of-the-Month Club News

"The book reads like the great adventure in history that those five years undoubtedly were . . . Goulden brings it all back, in happiness and discontent, in glory and stupidity, in brilliant color and foreboding shade."
—Philadelphia Bulletin

"Highly recommended . . . A skillful blend of the immediacy of journalistic reportage and the more reflective judgment of a popular historian."
—Library Journal

"Some book: lively, instructive, and evocative history . . . I don't see how you can really understand America today without sharing Joe Goulden's understanding of the late forties, when all we are — and aren't — today really began."
—BILL MOYERS

"At once good history and good reading: a remarkable triumph for Joseph Goulden."
—LARRY L. KING

"An animated, colorful, evocative remembrance . . . Goulden's fact-filled pages will induce a deep sense of nostalgia for that simpler time when the future looked so bright."
—John Barkham Reviews

The Washington insider's novel that has other insiders saying: "IT'S DYNAMITE!"

Les Whitten, the veteran investigative reporter who shares Jack Anderson's byline, has written a novel about sex, payoffs, and power in Washington that exposes the real world behind the recent, shocking headlines.

In CONFLICT OF INTEREST, an investigative reporter named Aubrey Warder digs into the life of an alcoholic Speaker of the House and comes up with more incriminating evidence than he bargained for. Before he's through, Warder has had to dodge the FBI, crack a safe, and go to bed with a source: the Speaker's wife. And finally he has to resolve a conflict of interest of his own—when he falls in love with his source and must choose between her and the biggest story of his life.

"It's wonderful reading," says the Washington Post Book World, "full of nitty-gritty details about investigative reporting, scandalous gossip about government officials, some of the more charming sex scenes in recent memory, and a thoroughly engaging cast of characters." And Washington's other top investigative reporters are hailing CONFLICT OF INTEREST as the breakthrough novel about the city they know best.

"Highly realistic," says Clark Mollenhoff. "Sex in high-level politics seems to parallel the lives of a few present and past Washington political figures."

Seymour Hersh and Dan Rather both say "I loved it!" "Les Whitten has the best imagination of any journalist writing today," adds Hersh. "It has come-alive characters and the swift pace of a Washington rumor," Rather confirms.

"The 'Advise and Consent' of the 70s," says Maxine Cheshire. "A hell of a good story" (Ted Szulc). "Brings 'Front Page' up to date" (Marianne Means). "This dramatic insider's story contains more truth than fiction. It's dynamite!" (Sen. James Abourezk, D., S.D.). "The word is definitely out—and CONFLICT OF INTEREST is a certain national bestseller. $8.95 at all booksellers now.

Unwise Veto

Though urged by Republican mayors around the country to sign it, President Ford has vetoed the $3.95 billion public works employment bill and denounced it as an effort by the Democratic majority to Congress to enact "empty promises and giveaway programs." The bill would lead, Mr. Ford asserts, to "larger deficits," higher taxes, higher inflation and, ultimately, higher unemployment.

This is a heavy load of denunciation to be laid on this legislation aimed at creating more jobs, when the unemployment rate has gone back up to 7.5 percent, with more than seven million Americans out of work. The bill is not a massive boondoggle; it represents less than 1 percent of the total Federal budget and less than one-fourth of one percent of anticipated gross national product in 1977.

Mr. Ford says the bill's scaled-down size from the $6 billion public works jobs bill he vetoed in February is irrelevant, contending that "had policy is bad whether the inflation price tag is $4 billion or $6 billion."

Obviously—indeed, simplistically—any appropriation can be denounced as inflationary, including the $101 billion defense outlay (an $8 billion increase over fiscal 1976) that the President has proposed for the current fiscal year. The real question, however, is whether the budget as a whole, in terms of outlays, taxes and deficit, is inflationary—or insufficiently stimulative—and whether particular outlays represent a constructive use of the public's money.

Congress has not acted irresponsibly on the budget as a whole or on this particular public works employment bill. The proposed $4 billion public works bill falls within the Congressional budget resolution of $413 billion for fiscal 1977. That spending total, given anticipated revenues of $363 billion, would result in a $50 billion budget deficit. This is a more realistic budget than President Ford has proposed and would bring down unemployment sooner without worsening inflation.

The President wants to limit outlays to $384 billion—a figure that would involve real slashes in virtually every social program, while only defense and energy outlays would rise. Such a budget ceiling would in fact be deflationary or depressive; Mr. Ford has sought to ward off that danger by proposing a further $10 billion tax cut. He still recommends a $43 billion budget deficit, with higher Social Security and unemployment taxes making up some of the difference.

The President has thus sought to further his right-wing philosophy—and his campaign ool only against the Democrats but against Governor Reagan—by this unwise veto.

The $4 billion public works bill would help the hard-pressed cities. It would create jobs for the unemployed; even if the President were right and Congress wrong in predicting that the bill would create only 160,000 rather than 300,000 jobs, these would help absorb many laid-off construction workers, and the counter-cyclical revenue-sharing to cities and states would save the threatened jobs of many policemen, firemen and other municipal workers. The bill would also provide needed funds for facilities to prevent water pollution.

The targeting of public expenditures to help the cities, the construction industry and the unemployed makes sense during this period of slow recovery from the serious 1973-75 recession. Congress ought to pass the public works jobs bill over the President's veto.

Strike Against the Sick

The strike of 30,000 employees against 33 voluntary hospitals here represents an unconscionable betrayal of their responsibilities to the sick both by the union and by hospital managers, who alike refuse to face fiscal realities.

Those realities are that the voluntary hospitals have become in effect public institutions, with close to 75 percent of their income derived from public funds; that neither the city nor the state nor the general public can afford any further increase in already exorbitant health service costs; that any increase for workers or relief for debt-ridden hospitals can only come from drastic reorganization and economies within a lavishly overbuilt, overstuffed and generally wasteful health care system.

The President's Council on Wage and Price Stability reported last spring that medical care costs have "significantly outpaced" increases in other consumer service prices during the past decade. The cost of the average hospital stay has risen from $311 in 1965 to $1,017 in 1975. The increase in hospital service charges last year alone was 13 percent, compared with 7.7 percent for all other consumer services.

Health care costs in New York City are among the highest in the nation, 8 percent above the average for the rest of the country, according to Carter Burden, chairman of the City Council's Committee on Health. Mr. Burden pointed out last week that city support for the volunteer hospitals amounted to nearly $400 million last year. Mayor Beame noted recently that overall city expenditures for health services have jumped 73 percent since 1972.

In his report, Councilman Burdeo cited inadequate control over spending by the private hospitals, including such factors as costly expansion plans at a time when the city has an estimated 5,000-bed surplus, duplication of expensive equipment, failure of a majority of the hospitals to join in cost-saving group purchasing practices and exceptionally high incomes received by many doctors and administrators.

Against this background, especially in view of the precarious fiscal condition of both city and state, it is vain for the union or hospital managers to look to public treasuries to absorb increased labor costs, as has been the custom in the past.

Instead of venting their frustration on innocent patients, both parties should begin to work together, in cooperation with the new Health Systems Agency, to create a more rational, coordinated and efficient hospital system for New York covering both municipal and voluntary institutions.

As in the case of regular municipal workers, cost savings through increased productivity and other efficiencies offer the only legitimate hope for improved benefits for employees of the voluntary hospitals—not increased contributions from government or the public.

Zoning 'Adult' Movies

In a recent decision upholding Detroit's attempt to zone "adult" movies, the Supreme Court ruled that a city has the right to try "to preserve the quality of urban life" and in doing so must be allowed "a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions."

Land-use regulation, or zoning, is appropriately viewed as an innovative and legitimate tool for the protection of a neighborhood. Just as innovative is the concept that the city, or the community, has rights as well as the individual.

What this means to New York is that the city no longer has to sit by and watch the heart of Manhattan turn into a sexual slum. Workers, shopkeepers and visitors in the area who are engaged in non-pornographic activities need no longer continue to be the victims of "victimless crime." The city can proceed to deal in a fundamental way with the abuses that have created the destructive blight that has made Times Square a sordid and dangerous place where legitimate businesses are hardly able to survive.

While the balance between free speech and the right of a community to preserve itself remains delicate and difficult, reasonable and even experimental zoning solutions can now be lawfully sought. New York's hands have ceased to be tied.

Mr. Vorster's Gamble

The South African Government has beaten an unprecedented retreat on the language issue that was the immediate cause of the recent Soweto disturbances. Pupils in schools for blacks will no longer face the legal requirement that they be taught in Afrikaans, the language of the Afrikaners who form the majority of South Africa's white population.

By giving in on this issue, Prime Minister John Vorster is clearly hoping to reduce the growing resentment of 18 million South African blacks, who outnumber the whites by four to one. Mr. Vorster would no doubt argue that he has made a historic move, that he has dared defy many in his conservative constituency by taking an action that would have been unthinkable even a few weeks ago before the Soweto explosion.

It is hard to view the South African scene, however, and come to any conclusion but that Mr. Vorster's concession is too little and too late. It is too little because it ignores completely all the more basic grievances of South Africa's black population, grievances that add up to the demand for full civic equality and for an end to the tortuous system of institutionalized inequality and discrimination.

The concession is too late because it comes after the black majority had resorted to violence, which, as Mr. Vorster's concession now proves, can result in some gains. If Mr. Vorster and his colleagues had deliberately set their minds to radicalizing their country's black population and convincing its elite leadership elements that active, violent resistance is better than appeals to reason and humanity, they could hardly have done a more effective job of education.

Horrible as it is to contemplate, indefinite continuation of South Africa's present policy of apartheid is only too likely ultimately to lead to racial war in that country. Soweto proved, if there were need for proof, that a vast reservoir of black anger and militancy exists. The white minority in South Africa is still very well organized and has great local superiority in military power; but so Afrikaner can be unaware of the implications of the disappearance of Portuguese strength in Africa, of the increasing disintegration of the white minority position in Rhodesia, and of the existence of powerful outside forces eager to arm, train and support black revolutionaries in South Africa.

In her Philadelphia speech earlier this week, Queen Elizabeth II thanked the United States for the lesson taught Britain by the American Revolution. The Britain of George III, the Queen said, lacked the statesmanship "to know the right time, and the manner of yielding what is impossible to keep." This is the lesson South Africa's whites need desperately to learn.

The whole vicious and unfair system of privilege based upon the color of a man's skin is doomed by the movement of modern history. All efforts to preserve it against the currents of the time will be for naught, and the more energetic those efforts, the greater the cost in lives and in suffering for all involved.

South Africa can yet be saved the horrors ahead if its dominant white minority takes the needed gamble of abandoning the obsolete patterns of thought and action symbolized by the word apartheid and instead extends the hand of reconciliation to all the people of South Africa, blacks, "coloreds," Indians et al. Africa can only be assured of peace and prosperity in the future if all its people are permitted the equality of opportunity and citizenship. There is time—but the warning signals have struck.

Letters to the Editor

South Africa: To Improve Race Relations

To the Editor:
If you wish to pontificate about South Africa during a time of stress and anguish, may one at least expect a basis of fairness and objectivity? This, unfortunately, your June 20 editorial "Sonder Warming" lacks.

You argue that there is no moral basis for political recognition of the various black nations in the areas their forefathers settled when migrating south a few centuries ago. In doing so you blatantly ignore the historic, moral and legal basis for the political restructuring of South Africa into black states and a white state.

Your assertion that "respected and moderate black leaders" have been imprisoned "under a variety of repressive detention laws" is simply out true. There are many influential, respected black leaders in South Africa. They are not in jail. They enjoy the support of their people. These leaders have never been imprisoned. They lead their people freely and actively and they criticize whomsoever and whatever they deem necessary.

There is also a free, outspoken press in South Africa and an independent judiciary. There is a democratic parliament. The basis of the evolving political systems for the black nations is also the parliamentary democratic system grafted to the black man's own political traditions. These factors assist the most sophisticated, developed, just and enlightened country in Africa. You allege arrogance over the requirement to teach subjects in Afrikaans in black schools. Afrikaans is one of South Africa's two official languages and is spoken by more people in the country as their first language than any other language, whether English or the nine black languages. Routed in seventeenth-century Dutch, Afrikaans developed and matured over two centuries as the youngest, most modern member of the Germanic family. The Afrikaner has always associated himself with Africa. That is why his language is the only one named after the continent of Africa.

A sound understanding of both Afrikaans and English is an essential requirement for fully utilizing career opportunities for all races in South Africa. Nevertheless, the language rule was neither arrogantly nor rigidly applied over the past 21 years. Afrikaans is the vehicle of instruction for some subjects only in 5 per cent of black high schools in South Africa.

You obviously share our concern about the recent tragic events in South Africa, but you should also be fair about the many steps taken to improve race relations. The mere fact that the riots never involved the rank and file of black urbanites is a point to consider before jumping to hasty conclusions.

Lebanon and the Pope

To the Editor:
I should be the last to discourage the entirely commendable concern for Lebanon expressed by Sol Jaffe in his June 24 letter. However, I must emphasize that efforts have been made and continue to be made to resolve that tragic situation, by among others, the Standing Conference of Arab American Middle Eastern Christian Moslem Leaders.

The role of His Holiness Pope Paul has been criticized—most unfairly—at least twice in recent letters. The Holy See has been most active trying to afford relief and to mediate among the warring factions in Lebanon. Caritas, the Catholic relief agency, was among the first to rush emergency supplies to Lebanon. The Holy See dispatched Cardinal Bertoli to Lebanon to mediate.

In his annual Christmas message to the College of Cardinals, Pope Paul expressed deep regret for the hostilities in Lebanon for which one does "not have an adequate explanation unless one takes into account the interference" of external forces. And most recently, on May 3 the Holy Father received the Secretary of the Sacred Congregation for the Oriental Churches, Archbishop Mario Brini, together with the members of the special mission he had sent to Lebanon to gather information.

The frustration we all feel at the unending bloodletting in Lebanon leads us at times to angry outbursts against those who most untiringly endeavor to afford concrete relief to the suffering people of Lebanon. Fairness demands that, if the efforts of these religious leaders receive no public recognition, at least these devoted men must not be accused of indifference.

How to Beat Moynihan

To the Editor:
One needs no extraordinary insight to see that the Democratic Senatorial primary as now organized has been programmed for a conservative victory by Mr. Moynihan.

Either Mrs. Ahzug, Mr. O'Dwyer or Mr. Clark would make an excellent candidate against Mr. Buckley, but if liberal voters are to split three ways, no one of them can be nominated. To thus ensure the nomination of Mr. Moynihan—whose tenacious service as Richard Nixon's footboy in Washington, as his agent in New Delhi and as Gerald Ford's mountebank, alert to the main chance, in New York would have seemed to mark him rather for further Republican preferment—would be a disservice to the party once led by Franklin Roosevelt, Herbert Lehman and Robert Wagner Sr.

Even now, however, there is a way to save the party from ignominy. It will call for unusual forbearance. If the three liberals will meet together in private, acknowledge the realities, agree upon one to stay in the race, the other two withdrawing but enthusiastically supporting their colleague in the effort to win the nomination in September, November's voters may have a clear choice between a sterile conservatism and progressive ideals.

Of Carter's Foreign Policy

To the Editor:
Jimmy Carter's foreign policy address offers a vast improvement over our nation's recent way of doing on the foreign front.

When he says that we must respect "the right of countries to make their own free choice . . ." it means that the U.S. may concede an importance to such rights that surpasses some of our own priorities.

Most notably, our rivalry with Soviet Russia, has dominated our overseas actions in every quarter of the globe for more than half a century. Heedless of the excruciating problems which exist in nations like Vietnam, Cuba and Angola, we have relentlessly pursued our consuming preoccupation with Soviet Russia into the territories of those peoples. Not only have they been the sufferers, but our actions have resulted in setbacks for us instead of successes.

All of the great objectives relating to foreign relations—arms reduction, nuclear retrenchment, an effective United Nations and peace in our time—depend upon a new policy by the U.S. toward the lesser nations, one that will restore their confidence to our purposes. These purposes in each respective case should relate to them, not Soviet Russia.

A reading of Mr. Carter gives encouragement that he already perceives this hopeful direction which our foreign policy can take. JOHN G. DOW

A 2-Pronged Penal Program

To the Editor:
Crime in this country could be reduced drastically if we had two kinds of prisons.

The first kind should be made as miserable for the inmates as is consistent with maintaining their good health. First or second offenders would be sentenced to these prisons for as little as a month but no longer than a year. These prisons would be designed to punish and thereby discourage criminal behavior.

However, certain criminals are not deterred by punishment and must simply be put away for a number of years. Their prisons should be as pleasant as is consistent with security and economy. For it is simply cruel to punish people for a long time and when it is clear that they will not respond. ROBERT W. WILSON

Role in the Council Issued by Colleagues

By MARY BREASTED

Mr. Troy Jr., who last felt it would not be proper for the Council to take any action against him until he had been sentenced.

Mr. Troy left the Finance Committee hearing about an hour after it was convened, and Howard Golden presided for the duration, taking up discussion on a bill that would, in effect, give taxicab fleets the opportunity to do their own vehicle safety inspections.

The committee adjourned without taking any action on the bill.

Three other bills, sponsored by a Liberal Manhattan Councilman at Large, Henry Stern, were discussed, and Mr. Stern testified unhappily, saying that the bills could have saved the city $2 million if they had been passed when he introduced them a year ago. His bills would raise the interest rates from 7 to 12 percent on overdue water charges, unpaid sewer rents and real estate taxes under $2,000.

No action was taken on these bills yesterday.

A HUGE FISH KILL FOUND OFF JERSEY

55-Mile Stretch of Ocean Floor 'Dead' of Pollution—Sludge Dump Suspected

By CHARLES KAISER

Commercial fishermen have discovered a huge fish kill off New Jersey in an area at least 55 miles long and 30 miles wide just south of the controversial sewage sludge dump off New York Harbor.

The dead fish have been discovered on the bottom of the ocean by fishermen who drag their nets and by scuba divers who have examined shipwrecks. The area is from Sandy Hook to Barnegat Inlet, about 55 miles down the Jersey Shore.

An official of the Sandy Hook laboratories of the National Marine Fisheries Service said that if the kill was as large as fishermen had described it, it would be the biggest kill in the area since 1965.

"Completely Dead"

"I went out to a shipwreck, and it was completely dead—starfish, eels, lobsters, all sizes of crabs—everything was dead," said Pat Yanaton, a microbiologist who is environmental committee for the Eastern Diveboat Association.

Mr. Yanaton and others who have observed the kill say the ocean is befouled by yellowish brown water below the thermocline—the layer of water between the warmer surface zone and the colder deep-water zone.

David Bulloch, president of the Sandy Hook-based American Littoral Society, said that he and many of the fishermen in the area believed the sewage sludge dump to be the cause of the polluted condition.

But Comdr. R. Lawrence Swanson, who heads the New York Bight project of the Federal Marine Ecosystems Analysis program, said: "At this time I don't see anything that is indicative that sewage sludge is the cause of this problem."

A Tornado Damages Port Area

A tornado staged another rare spectacle in New York Harbor just before noon yesterday. The black, twisting cone touched down in an industrial area near the waterfronts of Bayonne and Jersey City, whipping walls and roof from four buildings, tipping over trailers and cars and downing utility lines. Three persons were reportedly slightly injured.

The twister was visible from offices in lower Manhattan and from at least one airliner, whose pilot reported it as in the harbor, between the Statue of Liberty and Bayonne. That would have made it a waterspout, in keeping with the city's nautical mood these days.

But other witnesses, supported by the National Weather Service, said it actually reached the surface inland and moved slowly and destructively north for a matter of minutes before dissolving into a general thunderstorm that swept the area.

Severe damage was suffered by half a dozen industrial buildings along Chapel and Linden Avenues in Bayonne and Jersey City and Port Jersey Boulevard. Nine truck trailers were overturned in the Military Ocean Terminal, and some contents of a warehouse at 100 Harbor Drive were blown across the road.

A Weather Service aide said the metropolitan region gets a tornado about once a year, the last previous one having been registered in Flanders, N. J., a year ago.

Newark Puerto Ricans Found Slighted

The Newark Human Rights Commission said in a long-awaited report that there were serious shortcomings in the treatment of the city's Spanish-speaking population, most of it Puerto Rican, and proposed 24 recommendations for correcting them.

The commission called for employment practices in both civil offices and the uniformed Police and Fire Departments that better reflected the growth of Newark's Hispanic population. Recommended, too, were greater use of bilingual skills among employees having direct contact with the public and an expansion of the publication of official documents in both Spanish and English.

Inquiry on Intelligence Crimes Asked

The Association of the Bar of the City of New York released a report urging the appointment of a temporary special prosecutor to investigate possible crimes committed by Federal intelligence-agency employees. George M. Hasen, chairman of the association's committee on civil rights, said that recent Congressional committee hearings had uncovered sufficient evidence of criminal activity by intelligence employees to justify a "full, fair and impartial investigation."

Inmate 'Just Walks Out' of Courthouse

A prison inmate being held on robbery charges strolled through the open doors of a holding pen in State Supreme Court in Queens and escaped, the police and Corrections Department officials reported. The prisoner, Raymond Hernandez, 46 years old, "just walked out" of the holding pen, according to a police officer. Mr. Hernandez was being held in $7,500 bond on robbery and criminal impersonation charges. He had been taken to the court from the Queens House of Detention for a hearing.

Homebound L.I. Riders Delayed

At least 15 homebound Long Island Rail Road commuter trains were delayed at or near Pennsylvania Station for 10 to 30 minutes during the peak evening period because of signal malfunctions in the East River tunnels, the railroad reported. Water, which had caused short circuits, was pumped out.

East 11th St.: Neighbors Rebuild Hopes

shirts bearing the words "East 11th Street" unload trucks of lumber and hoist bags of cement into doorways. All up and down the block, there are signs of building with the action centered on No. 519.

Three years ago, 519 East 11th Street was gutted, but the skeleton remained structurally sound, and a group of tenants organized to rebuild. Under a combination of Federal and New York City assistance grants, the tenants managed to acquire a $177,000 loan, at 7 percent interest, to be paid back over 30 years.

In return for their mortgage payments and the work they put in on renovations at $3 an hour—they call it "sweat equity"—their apartments become their own property.

"In an average year about 30,000 apartments in the city are abandoned," said Representative Edward I. Koch, Democrat of Manhattan, who conducted a tour of No. 519 yesterday. "In a good year, maybe 20,000 new apartments are built. To reverse that trend, you've either got to build new housing or rehabilitate existing units."

Travis Price is an architect specializing in solar energy who has been working on the East 11th Street project for the last two years.

On the roof of No. 519, Mr. Price explained the workings of the building's solar heating facilities—a series of flat copper plates, tilted towards the sun, with water circulating through them, gathering heat.

"What we're doing here is more than a building job," Mr. Price added. "It's urban homesteading. We're providing housing, and jobs, and a self-sufficient unit. We plan to put up a 38-foot windmill next, as a source of electricity, and I'd like to see us planting gardens, too. Everybody in the community's pulling together. This house here, to us, is like a church."

Sutton Leaning Toward Mayoral Bid

By RONALD SMOTHERS

While Borough President Percy E. Sutton of Manhattan is not exactly off and running for Mayor in 1977, he and a number of people who think he should make the race are making sounds that suggest that Mr. Sutton is at least "ready and waiting" to seek the post.

The latest sign to observers of the city's politics is the scheduling of a Saturday "Champagne and Soul Harlem Salute to Our Main Man Percy Sutton" sponsored by a number of Harlemites long associated with the Manhattan Democrat.

The proceeds of the $25-a-plate dinner, to be held at the Harlem State Office Building, will go "toward surveys, polls, political and community activities on behalf of" Mr. Sutton, according to the invitation.

Beame Is Praised

The dinner is the second of four such events planned for this year designed to part to raise $12,500 of the $25,000 spent on polls and to finance future polls on attitudes toward government and political personalities, according to someone close to the Borough President.

Poll results so far, he said, showed that Mr. Sutton is "watched more closely and evaluated more favorably as a candidate for Mayor in 1977 than he was in similar polls taken in 1972."

"As far as I'm concerned, there is no doubt that he is a candidate for Mayor," said State Senator Carl H. McCall, Democrat of Manhattan and one of the sponsors of the Saturday dinner. "With the growing acceptance of the idea of a Sutton mayoralty, we want to be ready."

The situation that Mr. Sutton and his supporters want to be ready for is the likelihood that Mayor Beame, despite persistent reports to the contrary, will not seek re-election.

"I am not now a candidate for Mayor, but I certainly have the capacity to be Mayor," Mr. Sutton said yesterday, repeating the statement he had made for more than a year in keeping his options for 1977 open.

"I will not run if Abe Beame is a candidate," Mr. Sutton said. "He is a decent human being doing his best to solve the city's problems and under those conditions my sense of loyalty to him would not allow me to run against him."

"But should he not run and my polls continue to show me doing as well as I presently am, I think I would make the run for Mayor. In fact, I'm rather certain I would, and with a large body of support."

Although Mr. Sutton is one of the most powerful black officials in the state, he concedes that he could not succeed in a race for Mayor without broad support from all of the city's ethnic groups—support that is now tied to Mayor Beame and will continue to be tied to him as long as Mr. Beame's plans are in doubt.

The Harlem fund-raising event is viewed as an essential first step in any campaign for Mayor, according to David N. Dinkins, the City Clerk and a longtime associate of Mr. Sutton's.

"Very clearly we all understand that any black who seeks a citywide office must be acceptable to and be able to raise money in his own community," said Mr. Dinkins.

Lloyd Williams, president of the Uptown Chamber of Commerce, which, along with several other Harlem groups, planned the dinner, was careful to point out that the sponsors were paying more than the normal rental for the facilities at the Harlem State Office Building. He said the group had been chastened by the questions raised recently about Mayor Beame's planned use of Gracie Mansion for a Democratic State Committee fund-raising event.

"Although this isn't a fundraiser for a declared candidate for public office covered by the campaign contributions law," Mr. Williams said, "we're filing the information of proceeds with the Board of Elections anyway."

'Too Hot' to Work, Staff Shuts Library Branch

By JOHN T. McQUISTON

A West Side branch of the New York Public Library was shut down yesterday by its employees who, citing a contract provision, said it was too hot and humid to work. The move surprised community residents, many of whom had recently fought to keep the library open and had saved the jobs of those who work there.

"It's just too hot," complained one employee, who was busy printing a sign that said the library was closed. She posted it shortly after 2 P.M., a little more than two hours after the library, the Bloomingdale branch at 150 West 100th Street, had opened.

As scores of disappointed children and adults filed out the door, the temperature in nearby Central Park was 76 degrees, the humidity 79 percent and the Temperature Humidity Index 73—a point at which about a fourth of the population is theoretically uncomfortable according to the National Weather Service.

"This library is never open as it is," said one elderly woman. "They keep asking us to write to the Governor and Mayor for more money to hire more employees. Then those who have a job say it's too hot to work and they collect their pay at the same time."

John M. Cory, director of the New York Public Library, said that the employees would be paid for yesterday. He explained that this was being done according to an old contract provision with District Council 37 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

He said the practice had developed when the libraries were fully financed and fully staffed and could cut back to a skeleton staff when the T.H.L., as measured individually by each branch, reached 80.

"We're already off skelton staff because of budget cuts, so now we close," Mr. Cory said. "I can see that this standing procedure could now be a sensitive issue to the public."

Mr. Cory said that long before the city's fiscal crisis, which has forced the closing of several branch libraries and the layoff of scores of employees, he had urged that all the older branches be airconditioned as the best means to increase productivity.

Before the shutdown yesterday, a breeze was blowing through the open windows of the Bloomingdale branch, and large fans kept the air circulating through the first-floor reading rooms, where neighborhood elderly gathered and children leaped through picture books, unmindful of the weather.

Yanks Tie on Error, Lose on Error in 9th

By MURRAY CHASS

Andy Hassler's losing streak lives. It continues at 17 games but how much longer Hassler can continue with the kind of fortune he encounters is debatable.

After the Yankees had tied the game with an unearned run against Hassler in the eighth, Frank White led off the ninth with a single, Al Cowens popped out trying to bunt, but White then stole second and continued to third when Mickey Klutts, who had played a good game in his major league debut at shortstop, let Thurman Munson's throw pop out of his glove and carom into the outfield.

straight game in which he has hit safely.

Jon Matlack, his pitching teammate, and so few for him, found himself struggling to last five innings even with a seven-run lead.

When the Mets were set down in order in the seventh inning by Gil Rondon, the fourth Astro pitcher, it marked the end of a 20-inning skid in which the Mets had put at least one man on base. The streak began following the eighth inning of the second game of last Sunday's doubleheader with the Chicago Cubs.

Three more hits in the third, including a double by Bud Harrelson and Koosman's second consecutive single, led to another run and a 7-0 lead. Phillips drove in the run with a long fly.

Following a walk to Jerry DaVanon, pinch-hitting for Seibert, which loaded the bases with one out, Koosman induced Enos Cabell to rap into a double play, short to second to first, to end their threat.

'The Best Ballplayer in the League'

From the loudspeaker in center field, rock music thumped through Yankee Stadium as George Brett threw left-handed off the mound. George Brett ordinarily throws right-handed, as all third basemen do. But in this moment before the Kansas City Royals were about to take infield practice, George Brett, his blond hair spread out below his tipped-back cap, was throwing left-handed off the mound for the fun of it. George Brett also was smiling, as all 350 hitters do.

But all the other hitters are looking at George Brett; he's even looking at himself. In his emergence as one of baseball's new stars for the American League West leaders, his boyish face has been on the covers of Sports Illustrated, The Sporting News and Baseball Digest.

The Homer In Spring Training

Before the White Sox acquired Ken from the Yankees in a trade for Carlos May, he pitched against George in a spring training game.

George hit a homer off me, he must have hit a fast ball 430 feet," Ken recalled. "He was laughing and jumping going around the bases and when he got to third base, I shook his hand and patted him on the back. But in the Yankee dugout, Billy Martin and the other players were booing me. When the inning was over, the dugout was empty. They had vacated the dugout in my honor."

To the Quick Wins Juvenile by Head

By MICHAEL STRAUSS
The Juvenile, which has been won by such notable thoroughbreds as Equipoise, Nashua and Bold Ruler, had its 100th running at Aqueduct yesterday. But despite its glamorous past, the 5 1/2-furlong fixture attracted only five starters...

in 1963, yesterday's victory triggered some reminiscence. Dick Meade, who assisted Mike Venezia and Robyn Smith with their tactics, has been particularly prominent in the Juvenile as a valet. Meade recalled that he not only had carried the saddle for Johnny Rotz on the day he won the Juvenile with Raise a Native, but that he also had been the valet for jockeys who had won five other editions of the race.

The amount of foot he showed in the closing yards. We were in contention all the way as we rustled down that Widener chute. But we weren't on the front end as we approached the wire. It was then that I chirped at him. It was all he needed to take the lead and draw away. The fixture was first run at Jerome Park in the Bronx in 1874—originally at four furlongs. From there it was moved to Morris Park—also in the Bronx—and then on to Belmont Park in 1905. It was not held in 1895, 1911 and 1912.

Park meeting and the current pacesetter at the Big A, starts a seven-day suspension today. What will he do? "Stay close to the track and work horses in the morning," he said. "I want to keep in shape." At Roosevelt... Yesterday was "gate day" for Sweden's Duke Iron as the runner of the eight horses scheduled to compete in Saturday night's $200,000 Roosevelt International Trot went through tuneups. Duke Iron was the only one in the group to work with the starting gate today. His 30-year-old driver, Shig Johansson, explained that his trotter had had problems with the gate in the past. Advance win, place and show betting on the International Trot will begin tomorrow morning at the 153 OTB branch offices. Triple wagers on the trot will be accepted only on the day of the race.

Stock Market Indicators

Market Place

Insiders Favor Budget Industries

By ROBERT METZ

The shares of Budget Industries a financial holding company, registered a 10 percent gain last Thursday and an 8.9 percent gain on Tuesday of this week. Both advances were among the best of the day on the New York Stock Exchange.

Yesterday the stock eased 1/4 to close at 7 3/4. Budget Industries, which owns a savings and loan association, a commercial bank and a finance company—all in California—is not widely followed in Wall Street. But top executives of the company clearly think highly of its future, since eight of them recently purchased substantial quantities of stock in the company at prices above the current market.

Charles W. Knapp, chairman and chief executive officer, who was reached by telephone in Los Angeles, said that these purchases took place on May 24 and involved 116,000 Budget Industries shares. A group that Mr. Knapp put together used personal funds to acquire the shares at an auction arising out of the bankruptcy of a financial institution. (Mr. Knapp would not identify the institution.

The auction price was 7 3/4, and the purchases occurred on a day when Budget shares were trading on the New York Stock Exchange at 6 3/4, he said.

Insider reports indicate that Mr. Knapp bought 20,000 shares, as did E. D. Marks, senior vice president. Ray Stewart, Budget's treasurer, and Foster Fleutich, president of the company's State Savings and Loan Association subsidiary also purchased 20,000 shares each.

Edward Murphy, president of Budget's Century Bank, bought 8,000 shares and so did Thomas H. Almas, a Budget vice president and its controller, and John J. Borer Jr., also a vice president and Budget's general counsel.

The recent purchases raised Budget's insider ownership to nearly 25 percent. Mr. Knapp said that insiders and employees participating in the Employee Stock Ownership Plan now own 35 percent of the company's shares.

Mr. Knapp part of a new management team that joined Budget in March 1975, said the executives were willing to pay a premium for the shares because "we believe in what we are doing. We have come a long way in a short period of time, and we thought the stock was undervalued at the time we bought it."

As for the recent strong action in Budget Industries shares, Mr. Knapp said he could not explain it. He did not think a lunchtime session at the Fairmount Hotel in San Francisco on June 16 had much to do with the gains of recent days. A West Coast stylist (who said he had been invited to the meeting but did not go) said there had been some annoyance with Budget Industries before the present management team arrived. The annoyance arose from the fact that the company had sold shares in State Savings and Loan—an "excellent S.E.L.," he said—at 20 only to repurchase later at but 3 percent of the association at $10 a share.

Mr. Knapp said that, at the time of the repurchase, the market for State Savings and Loan was 6.

Mr. Knapp said that Budget Industries had previously sold unprofitable casualty insurance and real estate divisions, and was now a lending organization with three profitable divisions. He refused to make a profit projection.

He did say that he thought Budget Industries offered "something unique" now that California authorities had permitted it to open Century Bank branches in Stockton and Modesto in buildings that also house State Savings and Loan offices.

The offices of both subsidiaries are under the same roof but are separately managed. The advantage, he said, is that the commercial bank could refer its checking-account customers to the savings and loan association for mortgage money and that other referrals were also possible.

In a recent report the Value Line Investment Survey said: "We think that [State's] deposit growth exceeded the 19.8 percent increase achieved by the California S.E.L. industry in 1975," although data were not available to prove it. "Deposit growth is off to a record rate in 1976, and State [with 27 offices in northern and central California] probably is more than holding its own."

Value Line added: "Budget needs to reduce the losses of its Century Bank Plaza subsidiary. This office building has been an increasing drain on profits since it opened in 1972. The real key to reducing the loss is eventually to profitability. For the building is an increased occupancy rate, and there has been little improvement in this over the past several months."

Mr. Knapp was asked to comment on Century Bank Plaza: He acknowledged current losses on the Plaza but said Budget Industries "was at 'break-even' service." He added that the Plaza was now 85 percent occupied as opposed to 65 percent two years ago.

Value Line estimates that Budget Industries will earn 70 cents a share in 1976, down from $1.25 in 1975.

to Canada and to related products here.

The Noranda Sales Corporation said it had raised its price in Canada by 2.5 cents to 71.75 cents a pound and by 4 cents to 74 cents a pound in the United States. Inco Ltd. said it had raised its price in Canada and in the U.S. to 71.75 cents a pound on June 30 of a Canadian Government's Anti-inflation Board on June 30 of a proposed but unspecified price increase for copper there. Inco sells small amounts of copper in this country.

The Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company said it, too, had applied for Government approval for an increase in its Canadian price for copper.

However, Texasgulf Inc., which raised its copper price last week here by 4 cents a pound, indicated that it had not notified the Canadian government of such an action there.

Locally, the Phelps Dodge Cable and Wire Company said that as of Tuesday it had put into effect increases of 4 to 8 percent on all insulated wire and cable products to reflect rises in manufacturing and material costs. The company is an operating unit of Phelps Dodge Industries, which is the manufacturing subsidiary of the Phelps Dodge Corporation.

E. J. L. Smith, chief domestic affiliate of the Exxon Corporation, said it was raising its price for all grades of gasoline a cent a gallon, effective today.

The amount actually placed in the plan must also be included, so that the I.R.S. can determine whether an excess contribution has been made.

And the name of the plan usually does not get up by a bank, savings and loan association or insurance company—also has to be provided for the Government's use.

Form 5500-K is an annual report of the employee pension benefit plan for sole proprietorships and partnerships. It was developed, and is used jointly by the U.S. and the Internal Revenue Service's Administration of the Department of Labor.

This form requires those with Keogh plans to provide some detailed information about the type of plan they have established. For instance, one section calls for a definition of the particular plan that has been created.

Three categories are listed, from which the taxpayer must indicate a choice: a defined benefit plan (which states the amount of the benefit, like an annuity); a money purchase plan (whereby an amount is paid into the plan regardless of the profits of the business); and a profit-sharing plan (where the contribution varies with the business's profits).

The funding arrangement of the Keogh plan must also be shown on the form. A choice here is either a trust (with a trustee having legal title to the funds), custodial account (with one person having custody of the funds for another), fully insured plan (funded by insurance or an endowment contract) or bond purchase plan (funded by special United States retirement bonds for Keogh plans).

The form also seeks data concerning any potential conflict of interest concerning the plan by inquiring "Did any transaction involving plan assets, involve a person known to be a party-in-interest?" And it requests the answer to the question of whether the plan is a defined contribution plan, which states the amount to be paid in by the Keogh plan owner.

The due date for filing the two forms was set by the 1974 pension law at seven months after the end of the tax year, which for most persons is the calendar year. But because of the delay in publishing the forms, the deadline in 1976 was extended to Oct. 15.

Surprisingly, the financier—who was ousted by shareholders and sued by Leasco—returned in April 1971 as a director to the Pergamon board, which had dismissed him 18 months earlier.

Today, the Czech-born financier, who came here in 1940, brushed aside the allegations against him and indicated that the establishment had made the accusations because they resented him.

"Pergamon has over a very short time, under its former management, returned to its previous prosperity, growth and expansion," said Mr. Maxwell in a statement.

even if only part of it was repetitive.

But in a major departure, the commission proposed to narrow considerably the options of management in rejecting proposals it views as involving "ordinary business operations."

The Commission said the new rule "could not be relied upon to exclude proposals involving important business matters, notwithstanding the fact that such matters generally would relate to the conduct of the issuer's ordinary business operations."

On dividends, which might under the new "ordinary business" standard lose their present excludability, the S.E.C. said this might not be a bad result but that it recognized management might be inundated with conflicting proposals.

The dollar had a mixed performance on continental markets, moving fractionally in both directions. It rose in Frankfurt to 2.58 marks from 2.579, in Zurich to 2.4768 Swiss francs from 2.4728, in Paris to 4.7495 from 4.749 French francs and in Brussels to 40.26 from 48.215 Belgian francs.

Water Carriers Petition on Rail Deals The Water Transport Association petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission today to make sure that future railway mergers did not impair competition between the railways and the barge lines and Great Lakes ships.

One of the reasons provided for proposing to limit the number and length of stockholder proposals was to prevent them from obscuring other material in proxy statements.

Business Briefs

'Countervailing Duty' Law Tested

WASHINGTON, July 7—The United States International Trade Commission announced today its first investigation of injury to a domestic industry under the revised "countervailing duty" provision of the 1974 trade law.

That remains the situation for most cases. But in cases where the import in question enters the United States duty-free, an injury determination is now required before countervailing duties can be imposed.

World Bank Lending Rate Rises to 9%

WASHINGTON, July 7—The world banks' lending rate rose to 9 percent from 8.55 percent effective July 1, a bank spokesman said today.

Standby Credit Buys Pound

BRUSSELS, July 7 (UPI)—The British pound maintained its steady upward trend against the dollar today as the Bank of England and the British Treasury confirmed that Britain had spent more than $1 billion of its standby credit to support its currency.

The Bank of England confirmed that Britain had spent part of the standby credits of $5.3 billion it had received from 12 countries after its reserves were depleted by support for the pound.

Paper issues are the latest basic industry group to feel the brunt of selling. In recent sessions, chemical and automotive stocks had declined.

The revenue service's internal inquiry is not now delving into possible criminal violations by Gulf personnel who may have provided the gratuities, informed sources said.

An assistant to Commissioner Donald Alexander said, "Officially I could not comment on it as a representative of the I.R.S. We're prohibited from commenting on any specific case, especially where they involve allegations that might end up with criminal matters."

The Gulf spokesman also declined to comment, saying, "It would be inappropriate for us to discuss any specific I.R.S. investigation other than to say that we cooperate fully."

TRADING IN PUTS DELAYED BY S.E.C.

Hills Tells 4 Exchanges That Issues Remain Unresolved

WASHINGTON, July 7—Dashing the hopes of four stock exchanges that had hoped finally to begin trading in put options next month, the Securities and Exchange Commission announced today it would delay any decision on such transactions until January 1977.

The commission released copies of a letter sent by Rodrick M. Hills, chairman of the commission, to the heads of the exchanges that cited a substantial number of issues that remain unresolved in a pilot program of trading in call options that began in 1973.

Among the more important of these, it was believed, are investigations by the Chicago Board Options Exchange and the American Stock Exchange into irregularities in call options, which allow holders to buy shares at a specified price within a specified time.

Several target dates, the most recent being Aug. 17, have been advanced by the securities industry as feasible times to introduce put trading, and many traders believed that it would finally come next month.

The

June bloomed.

Ah, the sweet smell of success! In June, Wall Street Journal ad sales blossomed. Revenue and lineage set new all-time records for the month.

As you recall, May was a record-setting month as well. Ditto for April. And March. And February. And January. Back, in fact, all the way to September, 1975.

What's behind this rosy picture?

Our numbers are right. An audience of 4.6 million. A daily paid circulation of 1.5 million. An average subscriber household income of $43,634. Unmatched coverage of top and middle management in America's 800 largest corporations.

Beyond numbers, The Journal offers significant advertising advantages. A late closing means you can have your ad appear nationally within hours of your decision. Coast-to-coast, and on any business day. And with the benefits that come from an editorial environment that is topical, timely, to-the-point.

But what really counts are the results Journal advertising generates for Journal advertisers. So our success is, in reality, only a reflection of their success. That's why you should advertise in The Wall Street Journal. It's the way to make your sales flower in any season.
